Advisory Panel on Country Information

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will establish the Advisory Panel on Country Information under section 142 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. [95952]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 6 February 2003]: We expect to establish the Advisory Panel on Country Information in the coming months.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements and funding are or will be in place to assist the Advisory Panel on Country Information to carry out its functions under section 142(3) of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. [95953]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 6 February 2003]: A secretariat will be established to provide support to the Advisory Panel on Country Information.

The cost of any fees, allowances or expenses will be met from within existing funds available to the Immigration and Nationality Directorate.

Asylum Seekers

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what constitutes an exceptional case for the purposes of the Home Office's discretion to grant permission to work for asylum seekers. [96544]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 7 February 2003]: Each case is considered on its individual merits. Permission to work would be granted if no decision had been made on the application for asylum and where the asylum seeker was able to demonstrate that there were compelling exceptional or compassionate circumstances which justified granting permission to work.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the asylum application made by Mr. Samir Ameur on 16 March 1999 will be determined. [94444]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 30 January 2003]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 17 January 2003, and again on 6 February 2003.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people residing in Boston and Skegness (a) have had their initial application for asylum rejected and have submitted an appeal, (b) have applied for asylum and (c) have had an asylum appeal rejected. [95705]

Beverley Hughes: Asylum applications data are not available at regional level except by port (for those applications made at port—these accounted for 36 per cent. of applications in 2001). Corresponding information on initial decision outcomes, appeal cases and dismissed appeal cases, relating to persons in particular areas of the United Kingdom is also unavailable. The requested information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that asylum seekers and recognised refugees who are eligible to vote are on the electoral register. [96238]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The Representation of the People Act 1983 clearly stipulates who can and cannot vote in the United Kingdom. Asylum seekers are not eligible to vote and neither are refugees unless they become citizens of the United Kingdom. A visa allowing foreign nationals to stay in the United Kingdom indefinitely is not the same as citizenship and therefore, does not entitle a person the right to vote.

Programmes for people seeking naturalisation will include information on the electoral process in the United Kingdom

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to use Beachley Barracks, Sedbury, Chepstow, in Gloucestershire as a dispersal centre for asylum seekers. [96233]

Beverley Hughes: This property has not been considered to date by the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) for emergency accommodation, dispersal accommodation or as an induction centre for the housing of asylum seekers. Site searching for suitable sites for an accommodation centre has continued as previously announced. We will not be putting into the public domain details of any sites unless and until they are considered to be a serious prospect for the siting of an accommodation centre.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the total level of asylum support (a) fraud and (b) overpayment in each year since the establishment of NASS. [95130]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 3 February 2003]: The Home Office does not currently have an estimate of the level of asylum support fraud or the overpayment that could be related to this. However, we have established a dedicated team to investigate potential fraud in the asylum support system. We have also set up a team to conduct an audit of those cases supported by local authorities to assist the local authorities in identifying potential fraud in those cases. As part of the National Asylum Support Service regionalisation programme the structure and responsibilities of the investigations teams are being re-assessed with a view to strengthening the teams and improving working practice.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 27 January 2003 (refs 91210, 91211 and 91212), what the total level of fraud was in the 1,286 cases where NASS support was terminated; and if he will make a statement. [95220]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 3 February 2003]: The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) does not keep a central record of the level of fraud in individual cases.

Correspondence

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will respond substantively to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Epsom and Ewell on behalf of Mr. T. Dethridge of Epsom, dated 20 November 2001. [96491]

Hilary Benn: A reply to the letter was sent on 31 January 2003. I apologise to the hon Member for the delay in replying.

GPs

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many general practitioners have been accepted for entry to Britain under (a) the Highly Skilled Migrants Programme and (b) through work permits in the past year. [95470]

Beverley Hughes: The number of general practitioners approved during the period 5 February 2002 to 4 February 2003 are as follows:

	Number
Work Permits	53
Highly Skilled Migrant Programme	9

Highly Skilled Migrants Programme

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been (a) made and (b) accepted for the Highly Skilled Migrants Programme, broken down by (i) nationality and (ii) occupation. [95469]

Beverley Hughes: Since the launch of the Highly Skilled Migrant Programme on 28 January 2002, 2,809 applications have been received up to 5 February 2003. 1,414 of the applications have been approved. The nationality information requested is set out in the table. At present it is not possible to supply the occupational information requested due to the limitations of the Highly Skilled Migrant Programme database. However, the database is being re-written to ensure that information of the type requested is extracted and published during the next financial year.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Mr. Oliver Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners since January 1999 have been released on the home detention curfew scheme; how many of those released had been sentenced for (a) homicide and attempted homicide, (b) other violence against the person, (c) drug offences, (d) assaults and (e) other offences; what the average sentence (i) received and (ii) served was; what the average period spent on the scheme was in respect of each offence; how many prisoners in each of the above categories have (A) breached the conditions of the curfew, (B) disappeared and been recaptured, (C) disappeared and remain unlawfully at large and (D) had their licences revoked with reasons; what the offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme were while on the scheme, including offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence; what the offences committed by prisoners released on the scheme who committed a further offence while on the scheme that was similar in character to that for which they were originally convicted were, including offences committed by prisoners who committed more than one offence; and if he will make a statement. [96227]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 6 February 2003]: It has not been possible to collate the information in the time available and I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my reply in the Library.

Infanticidal Mothers

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mothers convicted of murdering their infant children are in prison in the UK; and if he will list them. [95590]

Hilary Benn: The number of mothers convicted of murdering their infant children who are in prison in England and Wales at 3 February 2003 is four.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for Ministers in the Scottish Parliament and the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme; [95038]

(2) if he will estimate the cost, per offender per month, of the Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme. [95034]

Hilary Benn: The Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme (ISSP) was launched in 2001 to provide the courts with a tough community based programme designed to tackle persistent young offenders. It provides unprecedented levels of supervision, including electronic monitoring, with programmes designed to tackle the underlying causes of the offending behaviour. ISSP is available for those on bail, on community sentences (the Supervision Order and Community Rehabilitation Order) and those on the community phase of the Detention and Training Order. It costs £1,416 per offender per month.

The main programme is being evaluated by Oxford University: the final report with reconvictions is due in March 2004.

Overstayers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals have applied to the Home Office under the Registration Scheme for Overstayers, as provided for in Section 9 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; how many of those cases are awaiting determination; and if he will make a statement. [95051]

Beverley Hughes: 15,315 applications were received by the closing date (revised figure following a full review). As at the end of September 2002, which is the latest date for which confirmed figures are available, 13,214 cases were awaiting determination. The target for consideration of all cases is April 2003 and arrangements are in place to determine the outstanding cases by that date.

Probation Service

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation officers there were in England and Wales in 1985; and what the most recent figure is. [95480]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is as follows:

England and Wales

	31 December 1985	31 December 2001
Chief Officers	56	42
Deputy/Assistant Chief Officer	201	294
Senior Probation Officers	1,047	1,106

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what help will be given to the Probation Service in Minehead to find new premises. [95120]

Hilary Benn: The estates management team in the Probation Directorate is working with the Avon and Somerset Probation Area to find better and more economical accommodation for staff based in Minehead. The objective is to enhance probation services delivery by targeting resources in the town, in order to deal more effectively with offenders.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total funding for probation services was in Somerset in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03. [95121]

Hilary Benn: The funding for Somerset Probation Committee in 2000–01 was £3.761 million from Home Office grant plus £0.918 from Somerset county council.

Somerset was amalgamated with Avon on 1 April 2001 when the new National Probation Service was created and therefore funding for Somerset was subsumed within Avon and Somerset Probation Board funding for 2001–02 and 2002–03. No separate funding information for Somerset is therefore available. Funding for the new Avon and Somerset Board was £13.480 million and £15.972 million respectively.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probation officers there were in Somerset in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03. [95123]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is as follows:

England and Wales—Number of probation officers

Travellers

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the oral answer by the Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for New Forest, East on 20 January, on new measures to simplify the removal of travellers from unauthorised sites, what discussions he has had with the Deputy Prime Minister on the issuing of new Planning Policy Guidance to make it easier for local authorities to obtain planning permission for local authority sites for travellers. [92957]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 January 2003]: I understand from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister that Guidance on the planning aspects of sites for gipsies is set out in Department of the Environment Circular 1/94. This guidance applies equally to local authorities' own sites as well as to applications for planning permission from gipsies themselves or others wishing to develop land for use as a gipsy caravan site. Local authorities may grant themselves planning permission for their own development, but they must make planning applications in the same way as any other person and follow the same procedures as would apply to applications by others. The procedures which deal with development undertaken by local authorities are contained in the Town and Country Planning General Regulations 1992. There are no plans for central Government to issue further planning guidance on this matter.

We are though working closely with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to produce operational guidance on managing unauthorised encampments. This guidance will be issued for consultation shortly.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Medical Schools

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many applications for medical training have been received by each medical school in each of the last five years. [85493]

Margaret Hodge: The latest available figures are in the table. Figures for 2002 will be available from UCAS in February. Over the last five years there have been changes to the application procedures for medical courses. As from 2000, applicants to medicine could make up to four applications where as in previous years the limit was six.

Applications via UCAS to full-time courses in pre-clinical medicine

Bureaucracy Task Force Review

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the time scale is for the bureaucracy task force review of the higher education sector. [94074]

Margaret Hodge: The Government will respond to the Better Regulation Task Force report "Higher Education: Easing the Burden" in February. As I have already announced, I have set up a stakeholder group, chaired by Professor David VandeLinde, the Vice-Chancellor of Warwick University, to implement the appropriate recommendations and to identify other areas where we can remove unnecessary bureaucracy in higher education.

Further Education

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students in (a) further education colleges, (b) sixth form colleges, (c) schools and (d) other centres of learning have completed (i) NVQs and (ii) GNVQs in each year since 1997. [89314]

Margaret Hodge: The number of awards of (i) NVQs and (ii) GNVQs made to candidates, by centre type, in each academic year since 1997 are in the following tables. Information for GNVQs for 2000–2001 is not available on a consistent basis to previous years because of changes to the data collection procedures that came into affect after the launch of Curriculum 2000.

The number of full NVQs awarded per year now appears to have peaked. There are three main reasons for this:

(i) In some sectors, when NVQs were first introduced, there was significant demand from the existing workforce. However, demand in those sectors is now mainly confined to new entrants and so year on year numbers have fallen.

(ii) Measures taken to improve the quality assurance of NVQs have resulted in the withdrawal of some providers and some employers.

(iii) There may have been movement from NVQs to vocationally-related qualifications (VRQs), which have now been accredited into QCA's National Qualifications Framework. The total number of all Vocational Qualifications (including NVQs) awarded has increased from 991 thousand in 1996–97 to 1.047 million in 2000–2001.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Young People and Audlt Skills has asked the Government's three key partners in this area (QCA, Learning and Skills Council and Sector Skills Development Agency) to produce proposals to develop and implement a new framework for all vocational qualifications. The partners are due to report by the end of March 2003.

GNVQs at all levels are gradually being replaced by other vocational qualifications. In September 2000 New Vocational A levels, also known as AVCEs (Advanced Vocational Certificates of Education) replaced Advanced GNVQs. The first full AVCE awards were made at the end of the 2-year cycle in summer 2002.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many shortage subject bursaries has been awarded to new further education lecturers; and what changes he plans in the scheme for these bursaries. [92762]

Margaret Hodge: There have been 174 applications approved by the Learning and Skills Council for 'Golden Hello' payments between 1 October 2002 and 13 January 2003 to new recruits to further education teaching in designated shortage subject areas. Take up to date has been modest but we are working with the Learning and Skills Council to develop better awareness of Golden Helios. We intend to review the scheme to ensure it is effective and appropriately targeted.

Higher Education

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills with reference to his recent White Paper Cmnd 5735 on The Future of Higher Education, what plans he has to ensure that students from the poorest backgrounds will not be deterred from applying to universities which charge the maximum graduate contribution per year; and if he will make a statement. [93748]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 29 January 2003]: As set out in "The Future of Higher Education" (Cm 5735), fair access means that the opportunities that higher education brings are available to all those who have the potential to benefit from them, regardless of their background. We know that raising participation and standards through our reforms of secondary and further education is critical to widening access.Our unified AimHigher programme will raise aspirations among young people from disadvantaged backgrounds.

Students from the poorest backgrounds will be eligible to have up to £1,100 of their fees paid, and student grants of 1,000 will be reintroduced for those from low income families From 2006 any university which wishes to charge variable fees will be required to have an Access Agreement which will be approved and monitored by the Access Regulator The Regulator will seek to extend current good practice through, for example, bursary schemes and other financial measures. The maximum fee will be capped in real terms for the duration of the next Parliament at £3,000. Additionally no student or family will have to pay fees before or while they are studying. Students will be able to defer their fees as for the current maintenance loans. The threshold at which repayment starts will be raised to 15,000, to make repayment easier for everyone. Repayments are income contingent and no real interest will be charged on student loans. Graduates will only be expected to pay back what they have borrowed in real terms.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the drop-out rates were (a) in the first year, (b) in the second year and (c) in the third year for undergraduates in each university and higher education institution in each of the last five years. [94702]

Margaret Hodge: The available information on drop-out rates, showing first year and full course figures for each HE institution in the UK, is contained in "Performance Indicators in Higher Education", published annually since 1999 by the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE). Copies of the four publications can be found in the House Library.

The latest edition, published in December 2002, gives figures for students starting full-time first degree courses in the United Kingdom in 1999–2000. Table 3 shows rates of non-continuation after the first year of study and Table 5 gives drop-out rates across the full course.

Figures published in 2002 by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) show that the UK as a whole has one of the lowest non-completion rates among OECD countries.

Hull University

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students attending Hull University have taken out student loans in each year since 1997; and what is the total amount of money borrowed. [94296]

Margaret Hodge: The number of students attending Hull University who have taken out a student loan, and the total amount of money borrowed, in academic years 1997–98 to 2001–02 is shown in the table:

Academic year	1997–98	1998–99[1]	1999–2000[2]	2000–01[2]	2001–02[2]
Total number of borrowers of which:[3,4,5]	2,000	4,600	4,900	6,300	6,700

[1] New student support arrangements in higher education came into effect in September 1998. For the first year of the new scheme, eligible new entrants received support for living costs through both grants and loans. Grants, which were assessed against family income, on average formed about a quarter of the support available. All students were entitled to a non income-assessed loan, which comprised the remaining three quarters of support available.

[2] New entrants to higher education in 1999–2000, together with those who started in 1998–99, received support for living costs solely through loans which are partly income-assessed. Grants for living costs are no longer available except for some limited allowances, e.g. for students with dependants; single parent students; and disabled students. Grants for students with dependants and single parent students are income-assessed but the Disabled Students' Allowance is not. From 1999–2000 student loans have been made available to those aged 50 to 54 who plan to return to work after studying.

[4] Refers to loans advanced in the target year only, which include those students in their first, second, third and any subsequent year of their course. Includes hardship loans but excludes fixed rate loans of £500 for part-time students introduced in September 2000.

[6] The amount of loan available is assessed by local education authorities in England and Wales for eligible students who are normally domiciled in their area and studying in the UK.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many students (a) paid tuition fees and (b) were exempt from paying tuition fees at Hull University in each year since 1997. [94297]

Margaret Hodge: The information is not available in the requested format. The student support arrangements up to, and including, academic year 1997–98 included the payment of tuition fees in full from public funds on behalf of eligible students domiciled in England and Wales. New student support arrangements came into effect at the start of academic year 1998–99 when new entrants to higher education were expected to contribute towards the cost of their tuition (£1,000 in 1998–99). The amount of the contribution depended on family income.

The number of students attending Hull University and who entered higher education from 1998–99, who were assessed by their local education authority (LEA) for their eligibility for student support under the new arrangements, and the numbers on whose behalf a payment of tuition fees was made from public funds, is shown in the table. Students who did not apply to their LEA for assessment are excluded.

Data for academic year 1998–99 are not available at institutional level.

Number of students attending Hull university who were assessed for eligibility for tuition fee support[1,2]

Academic year[3]	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Number assessed for tuition fee support	3,000	5,700	6,700
Number of students who received either a full or partial public contribution towards the cost of their tuition[4]	1,600	3,200	3,600

[1] Students normally domiciled in England and Wales; excludes students normally domiciled in Scotland, Northern Ireland and the EU.

[2] Students who applied to their local education authority for eligibility assessment.

[3] Data for academic year 1999–2000 comprise students who entered higher education in 1998–99 and 1999–2000; data for 2000–01 comprise those who entered in 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01; and data for 2001–02 those students still in study from 1998–99 onwards and new entrants from 2001–02.

Post-16 Education

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimates he has made of how many pupils from each social class entered (a) further education and (b) higher education in each local education authority area in each academic year since 1990. [91750]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 20 January 2003]: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

School Sport

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the impact of school sport on (a) exclusion rates, (b) GCSE and A-Level Grades and (c) classroom behaviour. [95859]

Mr. Miliband: Evidence from the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority's physical education (PE) and school sport investigation suggests that high quality sport impacts on many areas of school improvement, including attainment, behaviour, attitudes to learning and attendance. The changes in behaviour have been particularly encouraging. Where schools have invested in developing high quality PE and school sport at lunchtimes, behaviour has consistently improved. Further information on the results of the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority's investigation is available on their website. "Game Plan", a joint report published on 19 December 2002 by the Cabinet Office and the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, examined the effect of sport and physical activity on educational outcomes.

The Government are investing £459 million over the next three years (2003–04 to 2005–06) to deliver a joint Department for Education and Skills and Department for Culture, Media and Sport Public Service Agreement target to enhance the take up of sporting opportunities by five to 16-year-olds. The objective is to increase the percentage of school children who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport, within and beyond the curriculum, to 75 per cent. by 2006.

Schools Wages

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average wage paid is in 2002–03 per student in primary and secondary schools in shire local education authorities, broken down by authority. [96507]

Mr. Miliband: My Department collects information on the costs of staff in schools only as part of Outturn statements, so information about 2002–03 will not be available until the end of this year.

Student Loans

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will set a limit on the duration of student loans beyond which all outstanding debt will be written off. [94783]

Margaret Hodge: Write-off arrangements for student loans are already in place. Under the current income-contingent loans scheme a borrower's loan is written off when they reach the age of 65, if they die, or if they become permanently disabled.

Students (Social Class Origins)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what mechanism is used to record the social class origins of students in higher education. [83861]

Margaret Hodge: The social class of students in HE is derived from data included on the application form which applicants submit to the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS). Applicants aged under 21 provide the occupation of their parent and those aged 21 or over give their own occupation. This information is then used to assign each student to one of six standard social class categories based upon the Standard Occupational Classification published by the Office for National Statistics.

UCAS covers applicants to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses only, but not all students entering these courses apply via UCAS: some, notably mature students, apply direct to the institution. Data on the social class of students on postgraduate and part-time undergraduate courses is not held centrally.

University Access Process

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how his Department will collate information on parents' level of education through the university access process announced in the Government's The Future of Higher Education White Paper. [94057]

Margaret Hodge: Currently data on parental education are not collected centrally. The Department is setting up a group with external partners to discuss how appropriate and robust data might best be collected.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what impact his proposals will have on students studying in Scotland and Wales. [94755]

Margaret Hodge: Under current arrangements, students who ordinarily live in England and Wales will be eligible for funding provided by the UK Government, including the new higher education grant being introduced in 2004–05, regardless of where in the UK they undertake their higher education course.

Vocational and Technical Courses

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average costs of (a) vocational and (b) technical courses in higher education in England were in the last 12 months. [83936]

Margaret Hodge: The information is not held centrally. However, the methodology used by the Higher Education Funding Council for England to determine funding allocations recognises that some subjects, such as those which involve laboratory or workshop activities, require higher levels of resource to those which are mainly classroom based.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the departmental expenditure limits are in her Department's (a) resource and (b) capital budget for (i) museums, galleries and libraries, (ii) arts, (iii) sport, (iv) historical buildings, monuments and sites, (v) the Royal Parks, (vi) tourism, (vii) gambling and the National Lottery, (viii) ERDF, (ix) broadcasting and media, (x) commemorative services, (xi) administration and research and (xii) unallocated provision for (A) 2001–02, (B) 2002–03, (C) 2003–04, (D) 2004–05 and (E) 2005–06. [95909]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The departmental expenditure limits for the resource and capital budgets for the Department for Culture Media and Sport for 2001–02 and projections to 2003–04 are set out by sector in the table on page 104 and 105 of the 2002 Departmental Report (Cm 5423). Updated information, with plans to 2005–06, will be published in the 2003 Departmental Report in the spring.

Greater London Assembly

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what financial assistance her Department gave to the Greater London Assembly in 2002; and for what projects. [95850]

Dr. Howells: In 2002–03 my Department made a tourism grant of £1.9 million to the Greater London Authority for the promotion of London to tourists (as a destination in its own right and as a gateway to the rest of the UK) and for the improvement of tourism amenities and facilities.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many times since 2001 she has taken flights on departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied her on each trip. [95395]

Dr. Howells: The information requested is given in the following table:

Date	Type	Class	Accompanied
July 01 x 2	Government Flights	n/a	0 person
Sept 01	Scheduled	Business Class	1 person
37894	Scheduled	Business Class	1 person
37681	Government Flight	n/a	0 person
37803	Government Flight	n/a	0 person
Aug 02 x 2	Scheduled	Business Class	1 person
Sept 02	Scheduled	Business Class	1 person
37623	Scheduled	Business Class	1 person

All ministerial travel is undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Libraries of both Houses.

Portsmouth Historic Dockyard

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will place in the Library a copy of Sir Alan Borg's report on the Portsmouth Historic Dockyard. [96949]

Dr. Howells: The report on the Portsmouth Historic Dockyard was commissioned by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. In response to the report, the Dockyard attractions have agreed to adopt an integrated approach to the management of their activities through a new non-charitable company which is expected to be in place by summer 2003. I will place a copy of the report in the Libraries of both Houses.

Premises Licences

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport whether the cost of a premises licence will be the same to a public house whether it chooses to apply only for a licence to sell alcohol or whether it chooses to apply for multiple permissions licence under the Licensing Bill. [96879]

Dr. Howells: Under the provisions of the Licensing Bill, the cost of an application for a premises licence would remain the same whether a public house applied only for permission to sell alcohol or for multiple permissions including, for instance, the provision of regulated entertainment, including live music.

Public Entertainment Licences

Mr. Laxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many premises are covered by the public entertainment licence; and how many more she expects will have to apply for a licence to provide public entertainment under the proposed Licensing Bill. [96878]

Dr. Howells: The Regulatory Impact Assessment that was published alongside the Licensing Bill states that just over 9,000 on-licensed premises and registered members clubs hold permanent public entertainment licences or certificates of suitability. An estimated 37,000 temporary public entertainment licences are also issued each year.

Under the provisions of the Bill there will be no separate licence for the provision of public entertainment. Permission to carry on any of the activities licensable under the Bill will be covered by a single premises licence. It will cost no more, in terms of time or money, to apply for a licence permitting the sale of alcohol and the provision of entertainment than it would to apply for one permitting the sale of alcohol only. The Government expect that the removal of the cost deterrent in applying for permission to provide entertainment, along with the provision of a less bureaucratic system and measures to prevent unnecessary conditions being attached to licences by licensing authorities, will encourage many more premises to take the opportunity to provide public entertainment.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many statutory instruments were issued by the National Heritage Department in each year between 1992 and 1997; and how many have been issued by her Department since May 1997. [89849]

Dr. Howells: The number of Statutory Instruments (including Orders in Council) issued by the Department for National Heritage in each year between 1992 and 1997 are as follows:

1994	21
1995	15
1996	21
1997 (up to 30 April)	10

The number of Statutory Instruments (including Orders in Council) issued by the Department[1] in each year since 1 May 1997 are as follows:

[1] The name of the Department changed in August 1997 from the Department for National Heritage to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport.

	Number
1998	23
1999	24
2000	18
2003	2

Television Licences

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many pensioners have claimed free television licences in (a) Haltemprice and Howden and (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire in each year since 1997. [96712]

Dr. Howells: Free television licences for the over-75s were introduced in November 2000; no free licences were available prior to that date. TV Licensing, who administer the concession as agents for the BBC, are not able to provide geographical breakdowns of the number of free licences issued. However, estimates based on the 1991 Census indicate that there were approximately 5,900 people aged 75 or over living in the Haltemprice and Howden constituency and 19,500 in the East Riding of Yorkshire.

Vehicle Fleets

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made, by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each (i) category of vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel, on an annual basis, over each of the past three years, in renewal of her Department's and agencies' vehicle fleet on a lower emission basis. [96447]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport does not have a vehicle fleet. Ministerial and official cars are supplied, with driver, as required by the Government Car and Despatch Service. The Royal Parks Agency vehicle fleet has used 'green' fuels for some years. Over the last three years, the Agency has converted or acquired vehicles which are duel fuelled, liquefied petroleum gas/petrol. Of a 42 vehicle fleet, 30 (cars, vans and minibuses) are duel fuel, eight (4x4s, horsebox) are diesel and four (motorcycles) are petrol.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the annual rate is at which her Department has renewed its vehicle fleet by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each (i) category of vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel over the last three years. [96452]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport does not have a vehicle fleet. Ministerial and official cars are supplied, with driver, as required by the Government Car and Despatch Service.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Beta-interferon

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when Beta-Interferon will be available for sufferers of multiple sclerosis in Northern Ireland. [95837]

Mr. Browne: I refer the hon. Lady to my answer of 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 114W.

Corporal Punishment

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the office of Law Reform in the Department of Finance and Personnel to have completed its analysis of the responses to the public consultation on "Physical Punishment in the Home-Thinking about the Issues, Looking at the Evidence". [91351]

Mr. Pearson: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for North Down (Lady Hermon) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 377W.

Departmental Underspending

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are being taken to deal with departmental underspends; and if he will make a statement. [95096]

Mr. Pearson: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Donaldson) on 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 426W).

Dysphasia

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many young people have been diagnosed with dysphasia in the last five years in each of the Education and Library Board areas. [96662]

Mr. Browne: The information requested is not available.

Fair Employment Tribunals

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints have been made to Fair Employment Tribunals in each of the past three years; and what percentage in each year were settled or withdrawn before the case reached tribunal hearing. [93932]

Jane Kennedy: The information for the last three years is set out in the following table.

Year	Total complaints	Percentage of which were withdrawn or settled before full tribunal hearing1
2002	481	6

[1] The information relates to complaints withdrawn or settled before progressing to a full hearing. In a number of cases some preliminary hearings or hearings of directions will have taken place.

Giant's Causeway

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future development of the Giant's Causeway. [94452]

Angela Smith: The Giant's Causeway has been designated a World Heritage Site by UNESCO in recognition of its international importance to the conservation of geological features. It is one of only three natural World Heritage Sites in the United Kingdom.

World Heritage Sites are places or buildings of outstanding heritage value and, accordingly, the Department of the Environment attaches great importance to their protection for the benefit of future generations as well as our own. Planning policies for the protection of World Heritage Sites applicable to the Giant's Causeway are set out in the Planning Policy Statement (PPS 6): Planning, Archaeology and the Built Heritage. I believe that these policies are proving effective in protecting the Causeway and its immediate vicinity. Development proposals affecting the Giant's Causeway and its setting are carefully scrutinised in order to determine the impact on critical views of and from the site, access and public approaches to the site, and its appreciation and enjoyment by visitors.

The Department is reviewing the planning policy framework for the Giant's Causeway and its setting. The Department's Environment and Heritage Service is preparing management plans for the Causeway Coast Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty and the World Heritage Site. The Planning Service is preparing a new statutory development plan for the Northern Area which involves the Giant's Causeway. The draft development plan will be published in the autumn of 2003.

I am of course aware that the Moyle District Council has recently resolved to proceed to rebuild that portion of the visitor centre that was destroyed by fire in 2000. My colleague, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, my hon. Friend the Member for Dudley, South (Mr. Pearson) is currently engaged in a series of meetings with key interests in relation to the interpretation of the World Heritage Site. He and I are determined to find the best way to achieve this.

Health Care Staff (Impersonation)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents where individuals were discovered in hospitals in Northern Ireland pretending to be health care staff there have been in the last three years. [96571]

Mr. Browne: No such incidents have been reported.

Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will amend the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum of the Draft Housing (NI) Order to reflect the concerns of the Northern Ireland Assembly's Social Development Committee in terms of (a) introductory tenancies, (b) large scale voluntary transfers, (c) homelessness, (d) new build and (e) anti-social behaviour; and if he will make a statement. [96392]

Mr. Browne: No. The purpose of the Explanatory Memorandum is to give a broad explanation of the provisions included in the Order and no amendment is required.

Maternity Provision (Belfast)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the costs were of publishing and posting the November 2002 consultation document, "A New Centralised Maternity Hospital for Belfast". [95836]

Mr. Browne: The cost of designing and printing the consultation document "A New Centralised Maternity Hospital for Belfast", published in November 2002, was £10,455.

The publication was posted to a wide range of organisations and individuals at a cost of £9,230. A number of copies were distributed by courier at a cost of £48.

Mental Health

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in improving the treatment of mental health patients in each Board area. [95150]

Mr. Browne: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in each Board area are suffering from mental health problems. [95156]

Mr. Browne: Information on the total number of people suffering from mental health problems is not available, as many people with such problems are not in contact with healthcare providers. However, at 31 March 2002 there were 12,605 people in the Mental Health Programme of Care who were in contact with Social Services. These people are likely to be those with the more severe forms of mental health problems. The breakdown by Health and Social Services Board area is shown in the following table. The figures refer to people with mental illness and exclude those with dementia or learning disability.

Health and Social Services Board	People in contact with Social Services
Eastern	4,857
Northern	3,192
Southern	2,199
Western	2,357
Northern Ireland	12,605

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much of the mental health budget in each health board area is spent on (a) staff, (b) property and (c) care. [95157]

Mr. Browne: The Health and Social Services Boards reported expenditure in total of some £128 million in 2001–02 on the care of people with mental illness. This can be analysed by Health and Social Services Boards as follows:

£000s

Board	Total spend 2001–02
EHSSB	52.0
NHSSB	28.3
WHSSB	25.2
SHSSB	22.8
Total	128.3

No break down is available centrally of the amount spent specifically on staff, property and direct care within these overall totals.

Northern Ireland Cancer Plan

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on plans to bring forward a Northern Ireland Cancer Plan. [95969]

Mr. Browne: The Campbell Report "Cancer Services—Investing for the Future" provides the core plan for the development of cancer services in Northern Ireland. The Department's cancer strategy is underpinned by the wider public health strategy, including Investing for Health, the Palliative Care Report and separate initiatives on screening for breast, cervical and colorectal cancer.

Nursing

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses in each Board area have left the health service in each of the last two years. [95149]

Mr. Browne: The information requested is detailed in the following tables.

Figures in the following tables relate to nursing staff (including midwives) in each Health and Social Services Board that have left the health service in the last two years—leavers are defined as those who were in employment at the start of the year but who weren't in employment in the NI Health and Personal Social Services at the end of the year.

Nursing leavers between September 2000 and September 2001

Board	Headcount	WTE[1]
Eastern Board	488	411.88

Organ Retention (Royal Victoria Hospital)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision has been made to assist relatives to deal psychologically with recent revelations of organ retention at the Royal Victoria hospital. [95841]

Mr. Browne: The Clinical Psychology Department of the Royal Group of Hospitals allocated resources to run a dedicated telephone enquiry line. Those in need of psychological support were identified and clinical psychology staff made themselves available to set up and attend meetings between families and hospital staff. Following the establishment of the DHSSPS Human Organs Enquiry Line on 20 November 2002, the enquiry line at the Royal was closed. Callers to the DHSSPS enquiry line are made aware that psychological support is available.

Organ Retrieval (Royal Victoria Hospital)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedure is to be followed by relatives who wish to retrieve organs retained by (a) the Royal Victoria Hospital and (b) the Coroner; and what avenues are open to relatives if their request is denied. [95838]

Mr. Browne: Relatives wishing to make inquiries about the retrieval of retained organs should contact the DHSSPS human organs inquiry line on 08088008810. The enquiry line operator will then liaise with the relevant acute hospital trust or state pathology department as appropriate.

The Royal group of hospitals has a general policy that all organs reclaimed by relatives will be returned.

If a request to return organs is denied by the Coroner the decision cannot be appealed, except that all legal decisions can be challenged in the courts by way of judicial review.

Physiotherapy

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will increase resources available for the recruitment of physiotherapists; and if he will make a statement. [95152]

Mr. Browne: The budget for 2003–04 will enable the Health and Personal Social Services to maintain and improve a range of services. It is a matter for Boards, Trusts and other bodies concerned to agree on the detailed level of service provision, including any associated recruitment of staff.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recruitment patterns of physiotherapists in Northern Ireland. [95159]

Mr. Browne: The recruitment of staff, including physiotherapists, is a matter for individual Health and Social Services Trusts taking into account factors such as service needs and available resources.

Post-Mortems

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many post mortems have been conducted in Northern Ireland in each of the last three decades. [95842]

Mr. Browne: The Chief Medical Officer's Report on Organ Retention, "The Investigation into Retained Organs", published in May 2001, records that between 1970 and 2000 a total of 49,310 post mortems were carried out in Northern Ireland. A further breakdown of these figures in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland under what circumstances a post mortem can be conducted on a child without the consent of the parents. [95835]

Mr. Browne: Under Section 28 of the Coroners' Act (NI) 1959 the Coroner has the power to order a post mortem without the need for consent from the parent or legal guardian. All hospital post mortems carried out on children require the consent of those with parental responsibility.

Pre-school Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether children in their immediate pre-school year will be offered funding through the Pre School Education Advisory Group scheme; and if he will make a statement. [94434]

Jane Kennedy: The objective of the Pre-school Education Expansion Programme, which is planned and delivered by a Pre-school Education Advisory Group in each education and library board area, is to provide a year of funded pre-school education for every child in Northern Ireland whose parents wish it. This is achieved through the funding of places in pre-school settings which meet the Programme's quality standards. In order to give parents a choice of pre-school setting, funded places are available both in statutory nursery schools and units and in some 400 voluntary and private playgroups.

Parental demand for funded places is estimated at up to 90 per cent. of the immediate pre-school year group, but factors such as the geographical distribution of places may involve a level of provision slightly in excess of that. The number of places funded by the Department of Education has increased from 11,100 in 1997 to 21,600 in this school year, representing an increase in coverage from 45 per cent. to an estimated 92 per cent. of the immediate pre-school year group.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much funding has been allocated to each of the Education and Library Boards for pre school education for 2003–04 [94435]

Jane Kennedy: No specific allocations are made to Education and Library Boards for the core funding of pre-school education. The relative levels of initial funding for 2003–04 for pre-school education will not be known until Resource Allocation Plans are drawn up by each board and approved by the Department of Education. However, the following earmarked allocations have been made to the respective boards as part of the Pre-school Education Expansion Programme for 2003–04.

BELB	720
WELB	1,593
NEELB	2,007
SEELB	1,676
SELB	1,858

These amounts represent the recurrent funding for each board in respect of: places funded in voluntary and private sector playgroups and in new statutory nursery schools and units opened between the 2002 and 2003 school censuses; the costs of furnishing and equipping new nursery schools and units opening during the 2003–04 financial year; and administration and publicity costs.

Pre-school Places

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time pre-school places are funded under the NI Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity, Measure 4, Investing in Early Learning in Northern Ireland in (i) controlled, (ii) maintained and (iii) grant-maintained integrated schools; and if he will make a statement. [86868]

Jane Kennedy: A total of 11.34 million Euros (of which 8 million Euros is the EU contribution) is available to the Department of Education under Measure 3.4 of the European Union's Building Sustainable Prosperity Programme for securing the building of controlled, maintained, integrated and Irish-medium pre-school education facilities in local communities. The Measure will allow the Department to reclaim capital expenditure on a programme of nursery units, either built or to be built. The programme must, however, go through the application and selection procedure required by the EU. This procedure has not yet been concluded, and at this stage it is not possible to attribute the establishment of any units to Measure 3.4.

To date, however, 33 of the units for which the Department expects to reclaim the EU contribution have opened. These are providing places for 1,326 children in total—702 in controlled schools (26 full-time, 676 part-time), 494 in maintained (130 full-time, 364 part-time), 78 in integrated (26 full-time, 52 part-time) and 52 in Irish medium (all part-time).

TK-ECC

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to assist TK-ECC and its workforce as a result of the announcement of redundancies at its Dundonald plant. [95533]

Mr. Pearson: TK-ECC at Dundonald is facing a decision about making reductions to its workforce by up to 300 jobs. This is a commercial decision, forced on a company which is in a commodity market where margins are continually tight. Invest NI has been working with the company to help it achieve efficiencies and operational improvements. A competitiveness assessment has been undertaken to identify areas requiring development and improvement and Invest NI has offered assistance for a consultancy assignment aimed at improving the factory layout, production and materials handling processes.

Regional staff of the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) have already been in contact with the company to discuss the services DEL can provide to support any employees who might be affected should the company be forced to implement staff reductions. While appreciating the early offer of help, the company has decided to defer detailed discussions with DEL regional staff until a decision has been made on the timing of any actual reductions which may take place and how they may be implemented.

Ulster Hospital

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the situation at the Ulster hospital, with special reference to bed capacity, trolley waits, delayed discharges and the level of funding of the hospital from the 1990s. [95970]

Mr. Browne: The recent pressures at the Ulster hospital have exceeded the available bed capacity and have resulted in some patients having to wait on trolleys before a bed becomes available. The staff at the hospital have responded with great commitment and have tried to minimise the impact of these pressures.

A number of actions are being taken to provide a resolution to the underlying problems. There is a very significant expansion and redevelopment scheme under way at the Ulster hospital, which will increase bed capacity and improve acute services in the area. This has included the provision of 20 extra acute beds, which were opened in December 2002.

The Trust is continuing in its efforts to minimise the number of delayed discharges, and the hospital discharge team has been successful in resettling a number of patients on a fast-track basis to community care accommodation. In order to free beds for acute admissions, the Trust also utilises beds in the Ards and Bangor community hospitals for suitable patients.

The Trust is also working closely with the Eastern Health and Social Services Board and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, on a Service Improvement Project, which aims to improve throughput and maximise the use of bed capacity at the Ulster hospital.

With regard to resources, the level of funding for the Trust has increased from £48 million in 1993–94 to £144 million in 2001–02.

WALES

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times since 2001 he has taken flights on departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied him on each trip. [95397]

Peter Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Strategic Rail Authority

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what representations he has made to the Strategic Rail Authority in relation to the maintenance of rail services within the Wales and Borders franchise; and if he will make a statement. [96806]

Peter Hain: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary and I have had discussions with SRA representatives about a number of issues, including the new Wales and Borders franchise.

The Authority have made it clear that they will not consider any franchise proposals that suggest a closure of routes in Wales.

Students (National Assembly)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will establish an inquiry into leaks to media concerning the question of further devolution of powers with regard to tuition fees and maintenance grants to the National Assembly for Wales; [96992]

(2) if he has established whether the press were in possession of information on the question of further devolution of powers with regard to tuition fees and maintenance grants to the National Assembly for Wales in advance of contacting his Press Office. [96990]

Peter Hain: No.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Services Commission

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many Legal Services Commission practices were issued in (a) 2000 and (b) 2002. [95483]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I believe the hon. Member is referring to the number of contracts issued by the Legal Services Commission during 2000 and 2002. The number for both civil and criminal contracts are recorded.

The Legal Services Commission introduced contracting for civil legal aid from January 2000. On 1 January 2000, 5,012 general civil contracts were issued. A further 330 general civil contracts were issued during the rest of that year.

In 2002, 213 additional contracts were issued.

The Commission introduced contracting for criminal legal aid from April 2001. In 2001 3,055 general criminal contracts were issued.

In 2002, a further 141 contracts were issued.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much (a) her Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by her Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if she will make a statement. [92235]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested, and available without disproportionate cost, is set out in the table. The increased spend on advertising and publicity by the Lord Chancellor's core Department in 2000–02 was mainly accounted for by a public information campaign about the services of the new Community Legal Service, which was launched in April 2000.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the reconstruction programme in Afghanistan. [96473]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

Substantial progress has been made since November 2001. The effectiveness of the reconstruction programme has depended on joint efforts by the UN, the international community, the private sector, NGO's and the Government.

The Transitional Administration has set out a National Development Framework for Afghanistan and the Ministry of Finance and Central bank have rebuilt the central financial systems of government and have started to collect domestic revenues. 3 million children have returned to school. 4.5 million are expected to attend in the new school year, starting at the end of March. The major Kabul-Kandahar-Herat road, Kabul-Jalalabad road, and Pakistan border to Jalalabad road are being refurbished. The World bank is supporting the rebuilding of Kabul power station and airport.

However, much more remains to be done. Effective development in Afghanistan requires greater security in the provinces, strengthened capacity of the Transitional Administration and the continued commitment of the international community. The forthcoming Development Forum meeting of donors and the Transitional Administration in Kabul in March will discuss next steps in implementing the Government's National Development Framework.

Al-Qaeda Radio Stations

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether al-Qaeda radio stations operate from inside Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement. [96983]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Al Qaeda operatives communicate in a variety of clandestine ways. We are not aware of any Al Qaeda radio stations in Afghanistan.

Botswana

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to provide assistance to the Government of Botswana in dealing with the flow of illegal immigrants entering the country from Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [96297]

Mr. Straw: None. The Government of Botswana have sought no assistance from us. We will consider any requests sympathetically.

Burma

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sanctions have been imposed by the EU against members of the Burmese Government; whether persons who are subject to sanctions can enter the EU; and if he will make a statement. [96193]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The EU visa ban is targeted towards Senior Members of the Burmese State Peace and Development Council, senior members of the military and security forces who formulate, implement or benefit from policies that impede Burma's transition to democracy, senior Burmese tourism officials and the family members of all the categories listed above.

People covered by the ban are not allowed to enter the EU unless they are visiting the EU for the sole purposes of attending United Nations' events. In the case of the Burmese Foreign Minister, there is also provision for a visa to be issued when, by the agreement of all member states, the visit is deemed to be in the interests of the European Union.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which members of the Burmese Government are subject to EU sanctions; and if he will make a statement. [96181]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The EU Common Position visa ban and asset freeze is targeted on Senior Members of the Burmese State Peace and Development Council, senior members of the military and security forces who formulate, implement or benefit from policies that impede Burma's transition to democracy, senior Burmese tourism officials and the family members of all the categories listed above. It is reviewed and updated regularly, most recently in October 2002.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role of EU sanctions in promoting human rights in Burma. [96182]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The EU Common Position contains an arms embargo, a ban on EU high-level visits to Burma, a ban on defence links, a ban on the sale of items that can be used for repression or torture, a ban on non-humanitarian assistance and a visa ban and asset freeze on senior members of the regime and armed forces. In addition the European Community suspended Burma's Generalised System of Preferences (GSP) trading privileges in response to the use of forced labour and HMG does not encourage trade, investment or tourism with Burma.

All these measures are designed to press the Burmese regime and those who support and benefit from its misrule to allow progress to be made to bring about national reconciliation, respect for human rights and democracy in Burma. UK pressure will be maintained until Burma is irreversibly committed to substantive, lasting political change.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Burmese Deputy Foreign Minister, who attended the EU-ASEAN meeting in Brussels on 27 and 28 January, was subject to EU sanctions; what representations his Department made to EU partners on the matter; and if he will make a statement. [96192]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The EU visa ban applies to senior members of the Burmese State Peace and Development Council. The Burmese Deputy Foreign Minister, U Khin Maung Win, is a Vice-Minister, not a full Minister, and is therefore not subject to the ban.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has collated on improvements in human rights in Burma between January 2002 and January 2003; and if he will make a statement. [96183]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The overall human rights situation in Burma remains extremely poor and a matter of grave concern.

There were some very modest improvements in limited areas of human rights in Burma between January 2002 and January 2003, such as the release of political prisoners—over 200 in this period, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and some cooperation between the Burmese regime, the United Nations and certain international non-governmental organisations.

However, these limited improvements do not provide any assurance that the Burmese regime is now committed to substantively improving its human rights record or ending the violence and abuses in the ethnic minority areas of Burma. And since autumn 2002 there has been increasing reports of fresh restrictions of freedom of expression and politically inspired detentions and arrests in Burma.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department is taking to seek the improvement of human rights in Burma; and if he will make a statement. [96184]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The EU Common Position is designed to encourage national reconciliation respect for human rights and democracy in Burma. The UK annually co-sponsors resolutions on the human rights situation in Burma at the United Nations (UN) General Assembly and the UN Commission on Human Rights. On 20 January, the UK Permanent Representative to the United Nations made a statement in the UN that included expressing concern at the use of child soldiers in Burma. We are active in the International Labour Organisation to seek to press for the end of forced labour in Burma. We also use bilateral and multilateral events to press for rapid and sustained improvements in Burma's human rights record.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department have had with ASEAN nations regarding the promotion of human rights in Burma; and if he will make a statement. [96185]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We take advantage of our regular bilateral and multilateral contacts with all ASEAN nations to press for an improvement in Burma's human rights record. Most recently on 27 January my right hon. the Foreign Secretary stressed to ASEAN Foreign Ministers in Brussels the need for all countries to encourage national reconciliation, respect for human rights and democracy in Burma.

Cayman Islands

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for British legal links with the Cayman Islands of the collapse of the Eurobank case; and if he will make a statement. [93959]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 28 February 2003]: None. The legal relationship remains unchanged as set out in the Cayman Island Constitution.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will assess the conduct of the UK security services in the issues which caused the collapse of the Eurobank case in the Cayman Islands; and if he will make a statement. [93961]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 28 January 2003]: It is not the policy of HMG to comment on the activities of the UK security services, which are outside the scope of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (paragraph 6, part 1).

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on (a) the Eurobank case and (b) relations with the Government of the Cayman Islands. [93962]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Eurobank case was brought to trial on the basis of serious money laundering charges. The trial came to an end when the Attorney General decided to offer no further evidence. The Chief Justice then directed the jury to find the four defendants not-guilty on each of the six charges.

Our aim, with the Cayman Islands authorities, has been to take action against allegations of money laundering. This objective should enjoy widespread support in the Cayman Islands if its reputation as a well-regulated and reputable financial centre is to be preserved.

My noble Friend Baroness Amos, Overseas Territories Minister, has been in regular touch (both by letter and telephone) with the Leader of Government Business in the Cayman Islands to discuss the issues raised. She plans to visit Grand Cayman as part of a long-planned Caribbean trip in mid-February.

Eurobank

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what costs have been incurred by his Department's budget from the collapse of the Eurobank case; and if he will make a statement. [94408]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer of 30 January 2003]: None, apart from the travel and subsistence costs of the FCO's Deputy Legal Adviser, currently in the Cayman Islands, which will fall to the Department. He visited after the court had announced a decision.

Falklands Visit

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the visit by HM Ambassador to Argentina to Port Stanley was announced; whom he met; what discussions were held on what topics; and what reasons underlay the terms of the press conference with local journalists. [96296]

Mr. Straw: Our Ambassador to Argentina, Sir Robin Christopher, visited the Falkland Islands on his way back to Buenos Aires following leave in the UK. His main purpose was to brief Island Councillors and the Governor on Argentina and to discuss planning for the construction of the proposed memorial to the Argentine fallen at the Darwin cemetery, as envisaged in the Joint Agreement of July 1999.

Iraq

Dr. Jenny Tonge To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what his estimate is of the cost in US dollars of administrating Iraq in the event of regime change following war in Iraq; [96162]

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the cost in US dollars of administering Iraq in each of the first 10 years following any possible regime change. [96165]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No decision has been made to take military action against Iraq. Since we cannot know in advance the circumstances of a post-Saddam Iraq, we are not in a position to estimate accurately Iraq's possible requirements, whether financial or material.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list those contracts for supply of medical equipment and products to Iraq which have been vetoed by (a) member states of the UN Security Council and (b) the UN Security Council since imposition of sanctions; [96103]

(2) if he will list the nature and value of contracts for the supply of medical equipment and products to Iraq which have been permitted to take place from UK companies since the imposition of sanctions. [96104]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This question could be answered comprehensively only by researching United Nations records for the last 12 years, which could be done only at disproportionate cost.

As part of our policy to do all we can to improve the humanitarian situation of the Iraqi people, the UK has rejected contracts for exports to Iraq only where there is serious concern about their potential use in Iraq's military or weapons of mass destruction programmes. The Iraqi regime meanwhile continues to hamper the humanitarian programme, cutting its medical sector funding in 2002 by 75 per cent. and diverting to military use trucks supplied under the programme for delivering humanitarian goods inside Iraq.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a revised version of the UK Dossier on Iraq of September 2002. [96950]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are no plans at present for the publication of a revision of the September dossier.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UN inspectors were present in Iraq in each year between 1991 and 1998; and which (a) weapons of mass destruction, (b) their precursors and (c) missile delivery systems were destroyed in each of those years. [96750]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The numbers of inspectors on the ground in Iraq constantly varied during the period in question. As a general rule, there was an average of 80 inspectors in country at any given time.

Details of UNSCOM's activities in Iraq are available on the UN internet site at www.un.org/depts/unmovic.

Language Courses

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what language courses are offered by his Department to staff being posted overseas; and what the cost of these programmes has been in each year since 1997. [96303]

Mr. Straw: The amount of language training offered to staff posted overseas depends on the nature of the job to which they are posted. For those posted to a job which requires them to be able to speak a language to a certain level, they will receive the training necessary to reach the appropriate level. This can vary from a few months for basic training in the more straightforward European languages such as French or Spanish to up to two years for the hard languages like Arabic, Chinese or Japanese. For staff whose job overseas does not require them to be able to speak the local language, 100 hours language training is available to enable them to cope with the basic needs of everyday living. This 100 hours is also offered to spouses and partners.

The cost of this language training for each of the years since 1997 is as follows:

Year	£
1997–98	1,967,196
1998–99	2,262,308
1999–2000	2,255,815
2000–01	2,322,356
2001–02	2,347,896
2002–03	2,519,883

Osama bin Laden

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from intelligence sources concerning progress made towards the apprehension of Osama bin Laden; and what evidence he has collated that Osama bin Laden is alive. [95317]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have received a number of reports concerning Osama bin Laden. It is the practice of successive Governments not to comment on intelligence matters. The Security and Intelligence Agencies are outside the scope of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information (Paragraph 6, Part I).

Palestine (British Citizens)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will take measures to increase the safety of British citizens in Palestine; and if he will make a statement on the safety of international humanitarian workers in the Middle East. [95834]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer my hon. Friend to our current Travel Advice for Israel and the Occupied Territories which includes a section on safety/ humanitarian experts (www.fco.gov.uk).

Staff Vacancies

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what staffing vacancies there are in (a) the sections of his Department dealing with Eastern Europe and the applicant states and (b) in the respective British embassies. [96299]

Mr. Straw: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no current vacancies in the sections of the Department which deals with Eastern Europe and the applicant states. There are three vacancies in the respective embassies, namely:

Bucharest, Second Secretary Political—officer preparing to go out.

Moscow, Entry Clearance Officer—officer preparing to go out.

Tirana, Deputy Head of Mission—officer preparing to go out.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what staffing vacancies there are in (a) sections of his Department dealing with the European Union and (b) in the relevant embassies. [96300]

Mr. Straw: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has one current staffing vacancy in the section of the Department which deals with the European Union. There are three in our Embassies in the European Union. The vacancies are:

Brussels, Embassy Registry Officer—to be selected shortly.

European Union Department (External), Twinning Officer—seeking candidate.

The Hague, Second Secretary-Political—officer preparing to go out.

Madrid, HM Ambassador—officer preparing to go out.

Telephone Helplines

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many telephone helplines are sponsored by his Department; and which of these helplines are charged at (a) national rate, (b) premium rate and (c) local rate. [95717]

Mr. Rammell: The FCO will operate one national rate helpline once the Interactive Voice Recognition system for Consular Travel Advice is operational.

Temporary Promotions

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and what proportion of civil servants based in (a) embassies and (b) the sections of his Department dealing with the European Union are on temporary promotion. [96301]

Mr. Straw: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has six civil servants in our Embassies and 12 in the sections of my Department who deal with the European Union who are on temporary promotion. These represent 2 per cent. and 12 per cent. of the totals respectively.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many and what proportion of civil servants based in (a) embassies and (b) the sections of his Department dealing with Eastern Europe and the applicant states are on temporary promotion. [96302]

Mr. Straw: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has eight civil servants in our embassies and seven in the sections of my Departments dealing with Eastern Europe and applicant states who are on temporary promotion. These represent 3 per cent. and 10 per cent. of the totals respectively.

Venezuela

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the unrest in Venezuela; [96550]

(2) what impact the unrest in Venezuela has had on trade between the United Kingdom and Venezuela. [96551]

Mr. Rammell: We are following developments closely. In our regular contacts with the government and opposition we have stressed the importance of respect for the constitution and democratic principles, and supported the efforts of the Organisation of American States (OAS) to resolve the crisis.

We welcome the recent easing of tension and resumption of economic activity. Venezuelan ports closed since the beginning of December have reopened.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Government have made of the impact that illegal immigrants crossing the border from Zimbabwe may have upon (a) the economy and (b) HIV/AIDS levels in Botswana; and if he will make a statement. [96298]

Mr. Straw: Formal assessment of impact is a matter for the Government of Botswana. But we know that illegal immigration from Zimbabwe is placing an increasing strain on government services in Botswana.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Transport and Social Exclusion Report

Mr. Todd: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the Social Exclusion Unit will publish its report on Transport and Social Exclusion; and if he will make a statement. [93832]

Mrs. Roche: The unit published an interim report on transport and social exclusion in May 2002.

The unit's final report will be published shortly.

Community Plan

Harry Cohen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to publish his community plan; and what topics he expects it to cover. [94779]

Mr. McNulty: The Communities Plan was published on 5 February. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Gloucestershire County Council

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the reasons for the reduction in the grant for 2003–04 to Gloucestershire County Council;

what notice he gave to that authority of the change; and what discussions he plans to have with Gloucestershire County Council on the implications of the reduction of its grant. [97281]

Mr. Raynsford: In 2003–04 Gloucestershire County Council will receive a grant increase of £20.5 million or 7.1 per cent. This is £0.4 million less than the figure announced at the provisional settlement. The reason for the change is that, as is the case every year and as the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister made clear in the formal consultation letter sent to all authorities at the time of the December announcement, the calculations for the final settlement use more up-to-date data than are available for the provisional settlement. Local authorities and the LGA know that the consequence of using updated data is that there are always changes in grant allocations between provisional and final settlement. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will explain the changes as they affect Gloucestershire to the council should they so wish.

Housing (Right to Buy)

Matthew Green: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total value of discounts provided under the Right to Buy scheme was in each year since 1980. [90984]

Mr. McNulty: The total value of discounts on local authority sales into owner-occupation, including Right to Buy, in England since 1980–81 is presented below, along with the number and market value of properties purchased, expressed in real cost terms at 2001–02 prices.

Human Rights Act

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether inspectors of the Audit Commission are given training in the effect of the Human Rights Act 1998 upon their role, with particular reference to Article 6 of the ECHR. [96672]

Mr. Leslie: As part of their induction training, all Audit Commission inspectors are made aware of the implications of the Human Rights Act for the principles to be applied when carrying out their work.

Local Government Funding

Gregory Barker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what representations his Department received (a) prior to and (b) since the announcement of the Local Government Finance settlement for East Sussex concerning the treatment of cost of living in the local government funding formula; and if he will make a statement; [96256]

(2) what representations he has received from East Sussex County Council concerning the effect that the Local Government Finance settlement will have on (a) education, (b) core services and (c) the level of council tax in the county; and if he will make a statement; [96258]

(3) what representations he has received from East Sussex County Council concerning the effect that the Local Government Finance settlement will have on public services in the county. [96262]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister received two letters from East Sussex County Council in response to the consultation on the Review of Formula Grant Distribution and three letters during consultation on the provisional local government finance settlement 2003–04. East Sussex were also able to make representations on our proposals at a meeting with my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green. These raised a number of issues including the implications of our proposals for education, core services, the level of council tax in the county and the consequences for public services. The cost of living and the level of the County's GDP were also raised. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister considered carefully all the comments made alongside all others as we took final decisions on the settlement.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average local government finance settlement for 2003–04 is for county councils; and how much each county council is to receive. [96257]

Mr. Raynsford: The table shows the adjusted 20020–03 grant, the 2003–04 grant, the change in grant and the percentage change in grant for (i) county councils, (ii) total county councils and (iii) the average for county councils.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of local government revenues were derived from council tax in each of the past five years. [96525]

Mr. Leslie: The proportion of local government revenue expenditure financed from the council tax in the last five years is tabled as follows:

Income from council tax as a percentage of local government spending

Year	Percentage
1999–2000	25
2000–01	25

Mr. Maude: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of local authorities' budgets were ring-fenced in each of the past five years. [96526]

Mr. Raynsford: Revenue: The following table shows the percentage of local authorities' budgets that has been ring-fenced for the years 1998–99 to 2002–03. It also shows the percentage of government funding to local authorities (Aggregate External Finance, AEF) that has been ring-fenced over this period. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has recently changed the definition of ring-fencing, to better encompass the range of grants that have been developed. The key distinction remains between grants that attempt to control spending by the local authority, and those that do not. The full definitions are contained in the Freedoms and Flexibilities for Local Government announcement published on 26 November. The following table uses the new definitions. On the old definitions ring fencing in 2002–03 would be 14.8 per cent. of AEF and 11.1 per cent. of budgets.

Government are committed to keeping ring fencing to the minimum necessary. On current plans, the rising trend shown in the table will be reversed and fall below 10 per cent. by 2005–06.

Percentage of AEF	3.9	4.9	6.5	7.4	12.5
Percentage of budget	3.7	4.1	5.6	7.3	9.8

The 26 November Freedoms and Flexibilities announcement detailed the further freedoms from ring-fencing for high performing councils.

Parliamentary Constituencies Act

Ian Lucas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will amend schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986 to make the Electoral Quota a fixed number and not recalculated at each periodical review. [94782]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to amend schedule 2 to the Parliamentary Constituencies Act, which in any event, would not be appropriate while the Boundary Commissions are engaged in the fifth general review of parliamentary constituencies. This will not be complete until late 2006.

Regional Bodies

Andrew Selous: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the locations of the offices of regional bodies and agencies, in the Eastern region for which his Department is responsible, broken down by county. [95060]

Mr. Leslie: The following table shows the locations of regional bodies and agencies in the East of England for which the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is responsible by county:

Social Housing (Preston)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the ways in which the proposals in his statement to the House on 5 February on social housing will enable Preston City Council to respond to its backlog of social housing refurbishment. [96749]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister's statement set out the proposals subsequently published in "Sustainable Communities: Building for the Future". This states that local authorities will be able to choose the right approach for additional investment in the stock that they own from the existing three options of: stock transfer; The Private Finance Initiative; and for high performing local authorities Arms Length Management Organisations. Authorities can use different options from this list for different parts of their stock, as part of an overarching strategy. This has been made possible through the removal of some of the barriers that prevented some authorities from using stock transfer. These options should enable Preston to respond to its backlog.

Standards Board

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many complaints have been made to the Standards Board about members of (a) parish, town and community councils and (b) other councils in each year since its inception; of those how many have (i) been upheld, (ii) been partially upheld, (iii) been rejected or withdrawn and (iv) remain undetermined; and if he will make a statement on the nature of the complaints upheld and the disciplinary measures imposed. [94871]

Mr. Leslie: The number of allegations of councillor misconduct received by the Standards Board for England between November 2001 (when new codes of conduct were first adopted) and 31 March 2002, and between 1 April 2002 and 31 December 2002 (the latest date for which full figures are available) are set out in Table A.

Cases where the investigating Ethical Standards Officer reported that no action need be taken	102
Cases where the investigating Ethical Standards officer reported that the matter should be referred to the President of the Adjudication Panel[1]	36
Total	2,078

[1] On 16 January the Adjudication Panel heard the first case referred by an Ethical Standards Officer. The Panel concluded that the code had been breached, and the Councillor concerned was suspended for one year from being a member of his authority.

PRIME MINISTER

Al-Qaeda

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the countries where Al-Qaeda and associated terrorist organisations are known to (a) maintain bases, (b) conduct training, (c) recruit personnel and (d) receive financial support; and what requests the Government has made to governments of such countries to prevent these activities. [96128]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the right hon. Member for Ross, Skye and Inverness, West (Mr. Kennedy) in the House on 5 February, 2003, Official Report, column 265–66.

E-mail Addresses

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister by what e-mail address members of the public may contact him; when it became active; and the number of e-mails received in each month since activation. [97474]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Guildford (Ms Doughty) on 6 November 2002, Official Report, column 399W.

Euro

Keith Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he will take steps to enhance popular support for the euro prior to the assessment of the five economic tests set out by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. [96877]

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him in the House on 5 February, Official Report, columns 264–65.

Iraq

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list each action taken by (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the UN over the last 12 years to secure the disarmament of Iraq in accord with the ceasefire in 1991. [96136]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom has supported all the UN Security Council Resolutions relating to Iraqi disarmament obligations. We were one of the principal architects of UNSCR 1284 which established UNMOVIC as the successor organisation to UNSCOM in 1999, and of UNSCR 1441 last December.

Reports of UNSCOM, UNMOVIC and IAEA activities in pursuit of their mandates to ensure Iraqi disarmament can be found on their respective websites www.un.org/depts/unmovic and www.iaea.org/worldatom.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what the basis is for the figure of 20,000 Iraqi intelligence officers as cited in the dossier he published on Iraq on 3 February; [96141]

(2) what the basis is for the assertion in the dossier on Iraq he published on 3 February that all the hotels and offices used by UNMOVIC and IAEA have had surveillance equipment installed by Iraq. [96142]

The Prime Minister: It is a Government document based—as stated on its front cover—on a number of sources, including intelligence material. The first and third sections of the document, which gave rise to most of the media coverage on publication, are based largely on intelligence material. The first section describes the extreme lengths to which Saddam has gone to hide his weapons and obstruct the inspectors. The third section of the document describes the impact of the regime on the Iraqi people. The second section describes how the regime is structured. Some of that is based on work by Dr. Ibrahim al-Marashi which, as my office have already made clear, in retrospect, we should have acknowledged.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what the basis is for the assertion in his dossier on Iraq published on 3 February that Iraq's Government has sought out personal information on UNMOVIC personnel in order to exploit any weaknesses. [96370]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him today.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the terrorist groups he believes to have links with the Iraqi Government. [96924]

The Prime Minister: Iraq has a long record of support for terrorism; this includes support for radical Islamic groups such as the Syrian Muslim Brotherhood, Palestinian terrorist groups (e.g. Abu Nidal), the activities of the MeK against Iran, payments to the families of suicide bombers as well as the assassination of political opponents in Iraq and abroad. Saddam Hussein tried to assassinate President Bush and the Emir of Kuwait in 1993.

For links with al-Qaeda, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the right hon. Member for Ross, Skye and Inverness West (Mr. Kennedy) in the House on 5 February 2003, Official Report, columns 265–66.

Israel (Defence Exports)

Mr. Berry: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he had with the Israeli Labour leader regarding the liberalisation of defence exports to Israel. [94577]

The Prime Minister: I met Amram Mitzna on 9 January and our discussions were on the middle east peace process. The issue of defence exports was raised and I made clear that there is no arms embargo on Israel. We continue to support Israel's right to defend itself, within international law; and to buy arms from British suppliers for this in accordance with the consolidated European Union and national arms export licensing criteria.

Lord Birt

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister on what policy areas Lord Birt is working. [96478]

The Prime Minister: Lord Birt was appointed in October 2001 as my unpaid strategy adviser. The nature of Lord Birt's work is to provide me and other Cabinet Ministers with long-term internal strategic analysis and policy thinking.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Prime Minister how many times since 2001 he has taken flights within his official duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied him on each trip. [95381]

The Prime Minister: I travel making the most efficient and cost-effective arrangements. My travel arrangements are in accordance with the arrangements for official travel set out in chapter 7 of the Ministerial Code, and the accompanying guidance document, Travel by Ministers.

My office keeps records of my home and overseas travel. Since January 2001, I have been on 85 RAF flights, including six by RAF helicopter. I have made three flights by chartered helicopter. A judgment is always made about what is the most appropriate form of travel in the time available. In line with normal practice appropriate officials and security personnel accompanied me.

Ministers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister how many Government (a) Secretaries of State, (b) other Ministers, (c) Parliamentary Private Secretaries and (d) Whips have been in place in each year from 1980–81 to 2001–02; and if he will make a statement. [95826]

The Prime Minister: The numbers of Government Ministers and Whips are limited by the Ministerial and other Salaries Act 1975 and the House of Commons Disqualification Act 1975.

The numbers of Ministers for the years requested are set out in publications such as Dod's Parliamentary Companion and British Political Facts, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Parliamentary Private Secretaries are not Ministers. The normal rules on their appointment are one each per Cabinet Minister and Minister of State.

HEALTH

Learning Disability

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the NHS budget has been spent on learning disability in each year since 1979. [94418]

Jacqui Smith: Our White Paper, "Valuing People", A New Strategy for Learning Disability for the 21st Century, published in March 2001, encourages better integration of health and social care services for people with learning disabilities. To gain a full picture of expenditure on this group it is necessary to look at trends in both areas. Their combined spending on learning disability in 2000–2001 was 3.3 billion.

"Valuing People" also encouraged the National Health Service to treat learning disabled people in mainstream services rather than specialist services wherever appropriate. Information about NHS expenditure on learning disability is available only for specialist learning disability services. It is not collected separately on the expenditure associated with their use of primary and secondary care services. Available details of the proportion of total expenditure that went on social services and specialist NHS services for learning disabled people are shown in the table. "Valuing People" announced two new funds. In April 2002, we introduced the learning disability development fund (LDDF). The £22.6 million LDDF revenue comes from that element of the old long-stay adjustment within general health allocations, which is released as former long-stay patients die. This is being targeted on the priorities set out in Valuing People, including modernising day services, completing the re-provision of the remaining long stay hospitals and enhancing leadership in learning disability services. LDDF revenue is also being used to fund the Valuing People support team. LDDF capital, of £16.7 million in 2002–03, is supporting the development of integrated health and social services facilities for children and young people with severe disabilities and complex needs, specialist services for people with severe challenging behaviour and supported living approaches for people living with older carers.

The £2.3 million implementation support fund was introduced for three years from April 2001 and is focussing on advocacy, a national learning disability information centre and helpline, in partnership with Mencap and a number of development projects.

Notes:

[1] Figures for social care expenditure on learning disability are unavailable for the years 1978–79 to 1982–83.

[2] The proportion of social care expenditure spent on the learning disabled changed significantly from 1994–95 mainly because the basis of data collection changed from that year. The revised data collection more accurately reflected CIPFA accounting conventions. Figures for expenditure on the learning disabled from 1994–95 include fieldwork, senior management and purchasing costs and management and support costs.

Alzheimer's Disease

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have been diagnosed with Alzheimer's in each year since 1992. [96097]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not routinely collect such information.

Area Child Protection Committees

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list ACPCs which have representatives from Youth Offending Teams sitting on them. [95989]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not held centrally.

In accordance with "Working Together to Safeguard Children" (1999), the Government's child protection guidance, the area child protection committee (ACPC) should make appropriate arrangements to involve youth offending teams in its work as needed.

Audiology Treatment

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the Government's response to the Audit Commission proposals that audiology waiting times should be collected and targeted. [95986]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The Department collects data on waits for first outpatient appointments and inpatient admissions. This provides a broad overview of waiting times for a range of services provided by consultants. These services cover consultation, diagnosis and treatment and the information has proven itself to be valuable for managing the national health service.

By reducing maximum waits for outpatient and inpatient treatment, we will drive down waiting times across the board.

We are in the process of modernising the hearing aid service and demand for hearing aids tends to rise as soon as sites are modernised and digital hearing aids are available free on the NHS. The modernisation project team at the Royal National Institute for the Deaf and the Modernisation Agency are working with sites to help them reduce waiting times and we are currently testing ways of boosting NHS capacity by involving private sector partners.

Carers (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) carers and (b) young carers of school age there are in (i) the Leeds, West constituency and (ii) the city of Leeds; what support is given to (A) carers and (B) young carers of school age; and if he will make a statement. [96975]

Jacqui Smith: The information on numbers of carers is not held centrally.

Carers are entitled to an assessment to determine their needs as carers and eligibility for support. The carers grant, worth £100 million next year, provides money for local councils to provide short breaks for carers to enable them to continue in their caring role. Following my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's announcement in July 2002, the grant will continue until 2006, during which time it will more than double to £185 million to provide extended care and 130,000 further breaks to carers.

Additionally for young carers, we are supporting the development of over 100 projects across the country to give carers of school age access to appropriate advice, information and support or leisure.

Child Protection

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance based on the conclusions of the Victoria Climbié inquiry has been issued to social services departments about the criteria which must be satisfied before a case involving a vulnerable child is closed. [96036]

Jacqui Smith: No guidance has yet been issued based on the conclusions of the Victoria Climbié inquiry. We have announced that we will be issuing new guidance, to reach all professional staff dealing with the safeguarding of children, within three months of 28 January 2003, the date of publication of the inquiry's report.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what formal links operate between multi-agency public protection panels and area child protection committees. [96064]

Jacqui Smith: No formal links between multi-agency public protection panels (MAPPPs) and area child protection committees (ACPCs) currently exist.

The Joint Chief Inspectors' report, "Safeguarding Children", published on 14 October 2002, contains a recommendation that the Home Office should ensure that the relationship between MAPPPs and ACPCs is clarified.

The Government have welcomed the publication of this report and will respond in full to its recommendations in the spring.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce child safeguards plans modelled on youth offending teams. [96107]

Jacqui Smith: On 30 October 2002, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that we will be publishing a Green Paper on Children at Risk. We are examining a range of options, including those relating to child protection and youth offending, as part of the work on the Green Paper.

Children Act

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the range of agencies included in sections 27 and 47 of the Children Act 1989. [96112]

Jacqui Smith: On 30 October 2002, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that we will be publishing a Green Paper on Children at Risk. We are examining a range of options relating to possible reforms of child protection, and its related legislation, as part of the work to develop the Green Paper.

Children in Care

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are in place for social services departments responsible for looked after children to alert other agencies by electronic means about children who go missing from their usual place of residence. [95994]

Jacqui Smith: "Children Missing from Care and Home—a guide to good practice", was issued to every English local authority in November 2002, under section 7 of the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970, which means that, expect in exceptional circumstances, councils must follow its advice.

The guidance requires that, where a child in care is assessed to be missing, the authority responsible for their care must ensure that all is being done to locate them and return them to a place of safety. In order to do this the authority will have to inform the police and other relevant agencies and should also usually inform the child's parents. In individual cases, local authorities will be responsible for deciding on the most effective method for alerting the police and other agencies.

Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 670W, on the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health, how many days per month the (a) chairman, (b) chief executive and (c) each commission are contracted to work in their duties for the new Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health. [96086]

Mr. Lammy: The Chair of the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health is appointed to work around 10–12 days a month. Commissioners have a time commitment of around 2.5 days a month. The Chief Executive is contracted on a full-time basis.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cardiac interventionists his Department plans to recruit from abroad; [95633]

(2) how many cardiac interventionists his Department has recruited from abroad. [95634]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 4 February 2003]: The international recruitment of doctors makes an important contribution to the expansion of the medical workforce required by the NHS Plan.

As a result of the International Recruitment campaign, two cardiologists have been recruited by the national health service.

The number of cardiac interventionists who will be recruited through this campaign is dependent upon the number of trusts that wish to fill vacant posts.

Day Care Services

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to regulate day care services for adults. [96404]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 7 February 2003]: During the passage of the Care Standards Act 2000 we undertook to review, a year after the creation of the National Care Standards Commission, the possibilities for introducing regulation of day services which provide personal or nursing care. We are currently considering how to conduct the review and will publish our conclusions later in the year.

Drugs Bill

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total drugs bill was for the (a) hospital and community health service and (b) family health service for the most recent year for which figures are available. [95736]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the table.

Total drug expenditure, England 2001–02

	Outturn (£ million)	Growth (percentage)
Family Health Service Drug Expenditure	5,707	10.7
Hospital Community and Health Services Drug Expenditure	1,723	12.6
Total Drug Expenditure	7,430	11.1

External Consultancy

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92238]

Mr. Lammy: Expenditure by the Department, each agency and non-departmental public body (NBPB) on external consultancy each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03, is shown in the table.

Food Standards Agency

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the results of annual public opinion polls conducted by the Food Standards Agency on its effectiveness in gaining public trust; what plans he has to commission an independent appraisal from (a) the National Audit Office and (b) other bodies; and if he will make a statement. [96130]

Ms Blears: The Food Standards Agency (FSA) commissions an annual survey of public attitudes to food safety and standards issues that also examines levels of consumer confidence in the FSA. The surveys were undertaken by an independent research company, following a competitive tendering exercise carried out under Government procurement guidelines. The first Consumer Attitudes Survey was conducted during the first year of the FSA's establishment and was published in February 2001. The second survey was published in February 2002 and the third will be published shortly. Copies of the surveys are available on the FSA's website at www.food.gov.uk or on request from the FSA.

Therefore I see no reason to commission an independent study to measure levels of public trust in the FSA. It is a matter for the Comptroller and Auditor General, as head of the National Audit Office, to determine which subjects to review and whether or not to report to Parliament on them. I understand the NAO currently has an examination of service delivery under way, one part of which is reviewing aspects of the performance achieved by the FSA. The Comptroller and Auditor General will report to Parliament on this in due course.

Free Eye Tests

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free eye tests were given to (a) pensioners and (b) other people in (i) West Sussex and (ii) England in each year since 1997. [96099]

Mr. Lammy: The table shows the number of national health service sight tests paid for in West Sussex Health Authority for 1997–98 to 2001–02. Figures for the number of sight tests by age are not collected centrally. The nearest eligibility category for pensioners is those aged 60 and over.

Eligibility to NHS sight tests was extended to those aged 60 and over from 1 April 1999. There was an increase of 2.4 million sight tests between 1998–99 and 1999–2000. It is fair to assume that the vast majority of this increase was due to newly eligible people aged 60 or over obtaining NHS sight tests.

GPs

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioner vacancies there are in the Forest of Dean constituency. [96543]

Ms Blears [holding answer 7 February 2003]: The information requested is not available centrally. Statistics on general practitioner vacancies were collected by health authority area. For the twelve months between 1 March 2001 and 28 February 2002, the number of GP vacancies within the former Gloucestershire health authority area was 28.

Health Centre (Rossendale)

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the LIFT funding for a new health centre in Stacksteads, Rossendale is (a) time limited and (b) dependent on the site chosen for the project; and who is responsible for imposing such conditions. [95594]

Jacqui Smith: The central funding provided by the Department to support the East Lancashire local investment finance trust (LIFT) is being made available during the financial years 2002–03 and 2003–04.

Prioritised LIFT schemes for the East Lancashire LIFT were published in their strategic service development plan in August 2002, all of which have been agreed by local stakeholders.

Herbal Medicines

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adverse reactions to (a) herbal medicines and (b) vitamins and minerals there have been in each year since October 1996. [94225]

Ms Blears: The Yellow Card Scheme provides for voluntary reporting of suspected adverse drug reactions by general practitioners, hospital doctors, dentists, coroners, pharmacists and nurses. As the scheme is voluntary, not all adverse reactions are reported. The Yellow Card Scheme was extended to include unlicensed herbal remedies in October 1996.

The table provides a breakdown of the number of reports of suspected adverse reactions received through the Yellow Card Scheme in association with products containing herbal ingredients or vitamin and minerals.

	Number of reports of suspected adverse reactions
Received year	Herbals	Vitamins and minerals
1996	36	106
1997	46	106
1998	40	129
1999	64	159
2000	139	129

It is important to remember that a report of a suspected adverse reaction does not necessarily mean that the herbal product, vitamin or mineral caused it.

Herbal medicines and vitamin and mineral products are often supplied without prescription, and are often taken without advice from doctors or pharmacists. It is generally recognised that the reporting rate for medicines supplied over the counter (OTC) is lower than that of suspected adverse reactions associated with prescription medicines. To encourage reporting of suspected adverse reactions with OTC medicines, the Yellow Card Scheme was recently extended to include nurses as reporters, and will be extended to include patient reporting via NHS Direct in the near future.

HFEA

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he will take to prevent a conflict of interest arising from membership of the HFEA Committee by holders of a licence issued by the Human Fertilization Embryology Authority; and if he will make a statement. [93393]

Ms Blears: The Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority has strict protocols on this matter and requires members to declare conflicts of interest at any meetings and on any issues being discussed by the Authority. HFEA members' interests are listed in the HFEA annual reports.

Hospital Discharge

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when his Department plans to issue the hospital discharge workbook in (a) hard copy and (b) electronic form; [95738]

(2) what the total cost of revising the hospital discharge workbook was; and what the reasons for the delay in revising the document were; [95739]

(3) what assessment he has made of the dangers of discharging older people from hospital on a Friday. [95740]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 5 February 2003]: "Discharge from Hospital: Pathway, Process and Practice", was published on 27 January 2003 on the Department's website. Hard copies are available, free of charge, on request. The total production cost of revising the workbook was £94,658. We waited for organisational change in the national health service to be completed to ensure that the revision would remain relevant. The revision was commissioned in summer 2002 and completed in six months.

The workbook emphasises the importance of ensuring that all the necessary support services for effective hospital discharge are in place for patients, irrespective of the day on which their discharge from hospital occurs.

In-patient Beds (Inner London)

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the demand was for in-patient beds in inner London hospitals in each year since 1990. [94289]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally. Information on the average daily number of beds for each national health service trust and with summaries for England and NHS regions from 1996 is available from the Department of Health website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/

Interferon

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the drug pegylated interferon is recommended by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence for statutory funding by primary care trusts; and if he will make a statement. [95855]

Ms Blears: The Department and the Welsh Assembly Government asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) to appraise the clinical and cost effectiveness of pegylated interferon alpha 2a and alpha 2b for hepatitis C as part of its '7th Wave' work programme. A first draft of the guidance, the appraisal consultation document, will be issued for consultation to the registered stakeholders in the summer, and the guidance is due to be issued in November 2003.

IT Projects

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the full results of the Gateway Review process into (a) proposed upgrades of the NHSnet, (b) reprocurement of the NHSnet, (c) a national scheme for electronic bookings, (d) replacement of the Nation-wide Clearing Service (NWCS) and (e) a national scheme for electronic patient records; and if he will make a statement. [94600]

Ms Blears: New and large-scale procurement projects in central Government are subject to Gateway Reviews. The process examines a project at critical stages to provide assurance that it can progress successfully to the next stage. The Review provides project teams with advice and guidance from fellow practitioners and in order to maintain the integrity of the advice, this is held to be completely confidential by both parties. The Gateway Review process is not an audit.

Recommendations are made to the senior responsible officer, in this case Sir John Pattison, on good practice in key areas such as programme management, risk management and involving key stakeholders. The national programme is taking their key recommendations on board as appropriate to help prepare for implementation and the next stage in the Gateway Review.

The upgrade to NHSnet capacity has been approved by Her Majesty's Treasury and is not subject to the Gateway Review process.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the Regional Information Systems Plan at the Wessex Regional Health Authority with regard to current national NHS IT projects; and if he will make a statement. [94601]

Ms Blears: A number of lessons have been learnt about the effective procurement of information systems for the health services. These have been taken into account in national guidance and procurement procedures.

Mental Health

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information his Department collates concerning the time taken for manic depression to be diagnosed from initial consultation to final diagnosis. [96638]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not collected centrally.

NHS Treatment Abroad

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was to the NHS (a) in total and (b) per patient of the 234 patients treated for joint replacement and cataract operations in Germany and France under the Government pilot. [92556]

Mr. Hutton: The original overseas treatment pilot project undertaken by the Government treated a total of 190 patients of which 109 were treated in France and the remaining 81 in Germany.

The total cost of treatment within the project was £1.1 million.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his most recent estimate is of the forecast financial surplus or deficit for 2002–03 for each trust within the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority area. [95606]

Ms Blears: The audited information in respect of the financial performance of national health service trusts in the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority area for 2002–03 will be published in their annual accounts. The audited information will be available centrally in autumn 2003.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the projected overspend for each NHS trust in this financial year. [96409]

Mr. Hutton: The audited information in respect of the 2002–03 financial performance of all national health service trusts will be published in their individual annual accounts. The audited information will be available centrally in autumn 2003. We have no plans to publish unaudited information.

Patients Forums

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 686W, when he expects the first patient forum to be established; and what the timetable is for the establishment of patient forums across the country. [96085]

Mr. Lammy: The Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health is responsible for recruiting members, appointing staff and putting in place the infrastructure for patients' forums. This process will be well under way by the time community health councils are abolished in September and the Commission will be working towards the achievement of full coverage of forums by the end of the year.

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) primary care trust allocations are for (i) 2003–04, (ii) 2004–05 and (iii) 2005–06 and (b) notional primary care trust allocations will be for those years on the assumption that the allocations formula for 2002–03 was still used, for (A) each primary care trust within the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority area and (B) the Thames Valley as a whole. [95605]

Ms Blears: Central information regarding allocations is held on primary care trust (PCT) basis. PCT revenue allocations for 2003–04, 2004–05 and 2005–06 in the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority area are shown in the table.

Information on what PCT allocations would have been using the formula for 2002–03 is not available. Having introduced changes to the weighted capitation formula, following a wide ranging review, there was no operational reason to produce notional allocations based on an old formula.

Salt

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he is taking to reduce the level of salt in the diet; [95649]

(2) if he will introduce a programme informing the British public of the dangers of excessive consumption of salt. [95651]

Ms Blears [holding answer 7 February 2003]: The NHS Plan committed action by 2004 to "initiatives to work with the food industry—including manufacturers and caterers—to improve the overall balance of diet including salt, fat and sugar in food, working with the Food Standards Agency". 75 per cent. of salt in the diet is from processed foods. The Department and the Food Standards Agency (FSA) have been in discussions with industry to gradually reduce the level of salt in manufactured foods, where it is present beyond technical, safety and palatability needs. Sectors of industry have taken some action during the last few years to reduce the salt content of the food they sell. Scope for further reductions have been identified and the Department and the FSA are working with key industry bodies to progress action.

The Department and the FSA also plan to hold a meeting with wider stakeholders later this year to raise the profile of the issue and highlight the role of all stakeholders in addressing dietary salt intakes—including health, manufacturers, retailers, caterers and voluntary organisations. The stakeholders meeting will be held following publication of the Scientific Advisory Committee on Nutrition Sub-group report on salt and health.

Following the publication of this report, the Department and the FSA also plan to more widely publicise the impact of salt and health to consumers and the action they can take to reduce their intakes. At present, the issue of salt reduction is covered in FSA leaflets and on it's website. It is also highlighted on the NHS Direct website.

The five a day communications programme highlights that, although the fruit and vegetables in processed food count towards the five a day target, processed foods high in salt, fat or added sugars should only be eaten in moderation and that it is important to always read the label.

Special Advisers and Press Officers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) special advisers and (b) press officers have been employed by his Department in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and at what cost in each year. [92452]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) on 31 January 2003, Official Report, column 1056W, regarding special advisers across all Departments.

The table shows information on the number of press officers in the Department.

[1] The Department's staffing cost information for Press and Publicity Division for 1994–97 does not separately identify the cost of the press office or individual press officers. This level of detail has only been available since 1997–98.

[2] A direct comparison between the number of press officers and cost, cannot be made. The budget for the Department's media centre includes support staff and other administrative costs as well as press officers.

[3] For the financial year 2002–03 the final figures are not yet available.

Note:

The increased costs reflect increased/new activity.

St. George's Hospital

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many delayed discharges from St. George's Hospital, Tooting, there were in 2002. [94323]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally by the Department.

Surgical Instruments (Sterilisation)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the policy to establish automated decontamination services for sterilising surgical instruments in NHS hospitals; [96053]

(2) how many NHS hospitals in England operate automated decontamination services for sterilising surgical instruments. [96054]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 5 February 2003]: There are 182 national health service trusts in England, covering 240 central sterile departments. All these departments carry out decontamination using automated processes. Some instruments are not compatible with automated processes, however and therefore require to be cleaned manually. NHS Estates has issued guidance on how this should be done.

Waiting Times (Hull and East Riding)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people are waiting for examinations for (a) cancer and (b) heart defects in Hull and the East Riding; and what the waiting times were in the past 12 months; [92844]

(2) what the average waiting times and the number of people waiting were for referral to (a) cancer and (b) heart specialists in the Hull and East Riding in the last 12 months. [92845]

Jacqui Smith: Speciality based waiting time data for inpatients and outpatients, broken down by national health service trust, are available at www.doh.gov.uk/waitinq times.

Cancer waiting time data are available at www.doh.gov.uk/cancerwaits.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients waited longer than eight weeks after being referred to a (a) cancer and (b) heart specialist by their GP in Hull and the East Riding in the past 12 months. [92846]

Jacqui Smith: One patient waited longer than eight weeks in the period January to December 2002 after being referred to a cancer specialist.

There were 1,342 patients who waited more than eight weeks in the period January to December 2002. Currently the average wait to be seen is just over eight weeks.

TREASURY

Bowel Cancer

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have died from bowel cancer in the UK in each of the last 10 years. [95991]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tim Loughton, dated 10 February 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the number of people who have died from bowel cancer in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years. (95991)

The most recent available mortality data are for the calendar year 2001. Figures for each year from 1992 to 2001 are given in the table below.

Number of deaths from bowel cancer[1], United Kingdom, 1992 to 2001[2]

Calendar year	Number of deaths
1992	19,945
1993	18,667
1994	18,332
1995	18,174
1996	17,858
1997	17,564
1998	17,373
1999	17,001
2001	16,491

[1] Bowel cancer was defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) codes 152 to 154, and the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) code C17 to C21. In England and Wales, and Northern Ireland, ICD9 was used until 2000 and ICDl0 from 2001. In Scotland, ICD9 was used until 1999 and ICD10 from 2000.

[2] Figures for Scotland and Northern Ireland are for deaths registered in each calendar year. Figures for England and Wales for 1992 are based on deaths registered in that calendar year and for 1993 to 2001 on deaths occurring in each calendar year.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the projected five year survival rates were for people diagnosed with bowel cancer in each of the last 10 years. [95992]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tim Loughton, dated 10 February 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the projected five year survival rates for people diagnosed with bowel cancer in each of the last 10 years. (95992)

The most recent ten year period for which five year survival rates are available relates to cases diagnosed in England in 1986 to 1995. No figures are available for bowel cancer as a whole. However, around 95% of bowel cancers occur in the colon and rectum. The available figures for adult patients (ages 15–99 years) are given in the table below.

Five year relative survival rates (%) for patients diagnosed with cancers of the colon and rectum, England*

Year of diagnosis		Men	Women
1986–90[1]	Colon	39	39
	Rectum	37	39
1993–95[2]	Colon	44	43

* Cancers of the colon and rectum are coded 153 and 154, respectively, in the International Classification of Diseases Ninth Revision; and CIS and C19–20, respectively, in the Tenth Revision.

[2] http://www.statistics.gov.uk/StatBase/Expodata/Spreadsheets/D4924.xls The methodology used to calculate the survival rates for patients diagnosed in 1993–95 is closely based on that used to analyse cancer survival trends over the period 1971 to 1990[1]. Figures for cancers of the rectum are not available.

Children at Risk

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when he proposes to produce the Children's Green Paper; [96034]

(2) if he will ensure that in any new identification, referral and tracking system created by the Green Paper on Children at Risk, the same assessment tool is used for all young people at complex risk, whether the risk identified is of crime, exclusion from school, mental health problems, or other risk; [96000]

(3) when he plans to publish the Green Paper on Children at Risk; [96004]

(4) what action he is taking to ensure that services for adults in difficulty consider the needs of the adult's family as well as the individual needs, through (a) the changes proposed in the Children at Risk Green Paper and (b) the National Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy; [96002]

(5) if he will propose a statutory obligation that there be a key worker for any child at complex risk, and that the key worker (a) co-ordinate (i) a multi-professional assessment and (ii) the design of a care package and (b) ensure that the assessment and care package are (i) delivered and (ii) monitored. [96001]

Mr. Boateng: The Government recognise that professionals working with adults in difficulties need to consider carefully the interests of the children involved. The National Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy, which is being prepared by the Cabinet Office Strategy Unit for publication this summer, is considering the impact of alcohol misuse upon families.

The Green Paper on Children at Risk, to be published this spring, is examining the range of services available to children and young people who are at risk of educational failure, offending, victimisation and abuse, and poor health. The Green Paper will look more broadly at how families can be best supported, including considering how the adverse impact on children of parental health issues, such as substance misuse, can be minimised.

Food (VAT)

Mr. Spring: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether proposed European legislation will change the unilateral ability of the UK to maintain British exemption of food from VAT; and whether the British endorsement of the EU agreement with Malta regarding the exemption of food from VAT in Malta changes the existing arrangements between the UK and the EU on the exemption of food from VAT. [96578]

John Healey: No. The UK's right to maintain its zero rates of VAT is entirely unaffected by any proposed European legislation or by the agreement with Malta.

Independent Financial Advisers

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of the number of independent financial advisers who have recommended split capital trusts. [96630]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority tell me that information of this kind is not collected by them.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of the availability of professional indemnity insurance to independent financial advisers who have recommended split capital trusts. [96631]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority does not separately identify independent financial advisers who have recommended split capital investment trusts. Accordingly, we are unable to make a separate assessment of the availability of professional indemnity insurance to them.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions officials from his Department have had with the Financial Services Authority concerning the professional indemnity insurance requirements of independent financial advisers beyond June 2003. [96866]

Ruth Kelly: Treasury officials hold frequent discussions with the Financial Services Authority about a wide range of issues.

Liver Disease

Tim Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have died in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years from causes linked to liver disease; and how many of these were connected with (a) cancer and (b) alcohol damage. [96174]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Tim Loughton, dated 10 February 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the number of people who have died in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years from causes linked to liver disease; and how many of these were connected with (a) cancer and (b) alcohol damage. (96174)

The table below shows the number of deaths where the underlying cause of death was due to (a) primary liver cancer, (b) alcoholic liver disease, other forms of chronic liver disease, viral hepatitis and other diseases of the liver. The most recent available mortality data are for the calendar year 2001.

Number of deaths from liver cancer, diseases of the liver and viral hepatitis[1], United Kingdom, 1992 to 2001[2]

Calendar year	(a) Liver cancer	(b) Alcoholic liver disease	Other forms of chronic liver disease	Viral hepatitis	Other diseases of the liver
1992	1,850	1,777	1,794	167	341
1993	1,977	1,732	1,807	82	461
1994	2,031	1,941	1,924	72	434
1995	2,038	2,312	1,978	169	438
1996	2,120	2,572	2,027	165	474
1997	2,281	2,880	2,062	182	461
1998	2,248	3,197	2,207	196	471
1999	2,271	3,525	2,181	198	462
2000	2,432	3,789	2,038	219	529
2001	2,377	4,429	1,999	202	1,088

[1] The causes of death were defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) codes for the years 1992 to 1999 for Scotland, 1992 to 2000 for England and Wales, and Northern Ireland, and the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes for 2000 and 2001 for Scotland, and 2001 for England and Wales, and Northern Ireland. The codes used were as follows:

primary liver cancer—ICD9 155; ICD10 C22;
alcoholic liver disease—ICD9 571.0–571.3; ICD10 K70;
other forms of chronic liver disease—ICD9 571.4–571.9; ICD10 K73-K74;
viral hepatitis—ICD9 070; ICD1O B15-B19;
other diseases of the liver—ICD9 572–573; ICD1O K71-K72, K75-K76.

[2] Figures for Scotland and Northern Ireland are for deaths registered in each calendar year. Figures for England and Wales for 1992 are based on deaths registered in that calendar year and for 1993 to 2001 on deaths occurring in each calendar year.

Biodiesel Fuel

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding changes to the level of duty on biodiesel fuel. [97394]

John Healey: The Government have received a number of representations about the level of duty on biodiesel.

Cancer Care

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ensure that teenagers recovering from cancer do not experience discrimination when applying for financial services and related products. [96944]

Ruth Kelly: The terms and conditions which apply to financial services products can vary from firm to firm and are a matter for the product providers.

Census Forms

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many census forms were returned before the deadline in 1991; and if he will make a statement. [96201]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 10 February 2003:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question on how many census forms were returned before the deadline in 1991. (96201)

The collection stage of the enumeration for the 1991 Census was planned to take place between 22 and 25 April 1991, extending to 29 April for certain city areas. Completed forms were checked briefly on the doorstep for omissions; further forms were issued in cases where contact had not yet been established or where there was some uncertainty about the occupation of the accommodation. Due to the large number of uncollected forms, mainly from non-contacts and in inner city areas, the collection period was extended to May in some parts of the country. Special postal arrangements were introduced in the very worst areas to allow the public to return forms direct.

In total 20.8 million forms were processed, including over 120,000 forms which were received through the post.

Child Poverty

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the reasons for the changes in the level of child poverty between 1979 and 1997; and if he will make a statement. [95723]

Dawn Primarolo: When this Government came to office in 1997, one third of children were living in households with income below 60 per cent. of the national median: more than double the number in relative poverty in 1979. The increase in the number of children in low-income households between 1979 and 1997 can probably be attributed to an increase in the number of households with no-one in work, restrictions on out-of-work benefits and real increases in earnings of the employed population.

Child Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what means the wives and partners of men receiving children's tax credit have been alerted to their need to claim child tax credit. [94022]

Dawn Primarolo: To receive their entitlement to tax credits, people need to make a claim. Couples must claim the new Child Tax Credit jointly. The Inland Revenue has written to claimants of the existing Children's Tax Credit, inviting claims for the new tax credits. A reminder was sent in the autumn to people who had not responded to the invitation, and a further reminder is being issued in February. Employees receiving Children's Tax Credit through their PAYE codes have received a special insert with their 2003–04 coding notices, reminding them that Children's Tax Credit is replaced in April by Child Tax Credit and encouraging those who have not yet claimed the new tax credits to do so without delay. There is also a prominent reference to the new tax credits in the uprating letter going to all seven million Child Benefit recipients in the run-up to April.

These direct contacts are being supported by a high-profile publicity campaign on television, in the press, on radio and online.

Child Trust Fund

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, column 746W, on the Child Trust Fund, if his Department has decided upon the set of conditions referred to; and if he will make a statement. [96211]

Ruth Kelly: The Government are consulting stakeholders on the detailed design and implementation of the Child Trust Fund (CTF). As part of the consultation on the product specifications for the 'stakeholder' products recommended by the Sandler review, the Government are seeking views on whether explicitly to link the CTF to the other products in the Sandler suite.

Computer Misuse

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employees of the Inland Revenue have been (a) subject to disciplinary action for computer misuse and (b) prosecuted for computer misuse in 2002. [92946]

Dawn Primarolo: 205 employees were subject to disciplinary action for computer misuse in 2002. None of the cases warranted prosecution; the vast majority resulting in a reprimand.

Disciplinary action	Number
Prosecution	0
Dismissal	3
Downgrading	1
Financial penalty	2
Reprimand	199
Total	205

Cross-Border Pensions Directive

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions officials from his Department have had with (a) representatives of the European Union, including the Economic and Monetary Affairs Committee and (b) representatives of the British pensions industry concerning reform of the cross-border pensions directive. [94848]

Ruth Kelly: Treasury officials have been in regular contact with UK MEPs on the European Parliament's Economic and Monetary Affairs Committee to discuss developments on the Supplementary Pensions Directive ("Directive on the activities and supervision of institutions for occupational retirement provision") and to brief them on their likely impact on UK occupational pensions. Treasury officials have also been in contact with associations that represent the interests of the British pension industry to update them on the Directive's progress through the European Parliament.

Departmental Budgets

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the principal components of the changes in the budget of (a) HM Customs and Excise and (b) the Inland Revenue between 2002–03 and 2003–04; what internal administrative unit each change is attributed to; and if he will make a statement. [96523]

Dawn Primarolo: Aggregate budget figures for 2002–03 to 2005–06 were published in the 2002 Spending Review White paper (Cm 5570) on page 126. More up to date and detailed information will appear in the Departmental Spring Reports 2003 due to be published by the revenue departments by the end of April.

Euro

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he plans to announce a decision on whether Britain meets his Department's five tests for entry to the euro before 7 June. [96395]

Ruth Kelly: The Government have made clear that they will complete the assessment of the Five Economic Tests within two years of the start of this Parliament.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions officials from his Department have had with officials from the European Commission on the British economy's convergence with the eurozone; and if he will make a statement. [96426]

Ruth Kelly: Government officials regularly travel to Brussels to discuss EU business.

The Government will only recommend UK membership of EMU if it is in the national economic interest and the economic case for joining is clear and unambiguous.

A comprehensive and rigorous assessment of the Five Economic Tests will be completed within two years of the start of this Parliament.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) pursuant to his answer of 30 January 2003, Official Report, column 991W, on the euro, if he will make a statement on the preparedness of business for euro entry; [96537]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 30 January 2003, Official Report, column 992W, on the euro, what assessment of the proportion of businesses prepared for membership of the euro he will make before June 2003. [96538]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Matthew Taylor) on 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 29W.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which the British economy satisfies the five economic tests for entry to the euro; and if he will make a statement. [96880]

Ruth Kelly: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Prisk) on 9 December 2002, Official Report, column 88W.

Friendly Societies

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he will take to assist friendly societies; and if he will make a statement. [96498]

Ruth Kelly: The Government welcomes the contribution of friendly societies, in competition with other service providers, to increasing choice in savings products.

Following the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000, the Financial Services Authority has assumed responsibility for the regulation of friendly societies. The Act also introduced an independent ombudsman scheme and single financial services compensation scheme. These measures should increase confidence in those considering membership of friendly societies.

Measures such as the introduction of the Saving Gateway and the Child Trust Fund are intended to encourage saving by low-income groups, which should be of benefit to friendly societies.

FTSE 100

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings between officials from his Department and representatives of the business and financial sectors are planned for the next two months to discuss the value of the FTSE 100 share index. [96836]

Ruth Kelly: Treasury Ministers and officials meet representatives of the business and financial sector on a regular basis and will continue to do so. A wide range of topics are discussed, including current economic and financial developments.

Gross Domestic Product

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the level of tax revenue in the UK this financial year if the rate of GDP grows by (a) 2 per cent., (b) 2.5 per cent. and (c) 3 per cent.; [96209]

(2) what estimates his Department has made of the level of tax revenue this year if the rate of growth of GDP is (a) 1.8 per cent., (b) 2 per cent., (c) 2.2 per cent., (d) 2.4 per cent., (e) 2.6 per cent., (f) 2.8 per cent., (g) 3 per cent., (h) 3.2 per cent., (i) 3.4 per cent., and (j) 3.6 per cent.; [96215]

(3) what estimates his Department has made of (a) total income tax revenue and (b) total corporation tax revenue for this year if the rate of growth in GDP growth is (i) 1.8 per cent., (ii) 2 per cent., (iii) 2.2 per cent., (iv) 2.4 per cent., (v) 2.6 per cent., (vi) 2.8 per cent., (vii) 3 per cent., (viii) 3.2 per cent., (ix) 3.4 per cent., and (x) 3.6 per cent.; [96216]

(4) what estimate his Department has made of the level of UK tax revenue for (a) this year and (b) next year if growth rates were 2.2 per cent. this year and 2.4 per cent. next year; [96214]

(5) what estimates he has made of total UK tax revenues for (a) this year and (b) next year if growth meets the Treasury's (i) lower and (ii) upper boundaries for growth in this year and the next. [96213]

Ruth Kelly: Latest available projections of tax revenues for 2002–03 and 2003–04 are available in the 2002 pre-Budget report. They are based on a deliberately prudent and cautious assumption that trend output growth is $\frac{1}{4}$ percentage point lower than the Government's neutral view. This corresponds to GDP growth of 2 per cent. in 2002–03 and $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. in 2003–04, the lower boundaries of HM Treasury's economic forecasts for these financial years. Tax forecasts based on alternative forecasts of GDP growth are not available.

Home Insurance

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 14 January 2003, Official Report, column 514W, on home insurance, when the FSA will be consulting on the disclosure of fees charged by mortgage providers for switching insurance taken out as a condition of the mortgage; and if he will ask the FSA to consult additionally on whether these fees should be abolished. [96826]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) consulted on its proposals for the disclosure of fees charged for switching insurance in its consultation paper, CP 146. There will be a further consultation on this as part of its draft rules, and this paper will issue at the end of April 2003. This will provide a further opportunity for those interested to air their concerns on the matter. It is not for the Government to direct the FSA on the content of their consultation on mortgages.

Income Tax

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people paid the top rate of income tax in each year since 1994–95; and what revenue was gained from this tax bracket in each case. [93477]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 30 January 2003]: The information is given in the table.

Tax Year	Higher Rate Taxpayers[1] (000s)	Higher Rate Tax Yield[1] (£million)
1994–95	2,000	27,360
1995–96	2,130	30,370
1996–97	2,080	33,160
1997–98	2,120	35,170
1998–99	2,350	41,530
1999–2000	2,480	44,874

These estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes

While it is too early to comment on the detail of the Green Paper, the Government fully recognise the importance of information sharing among different agencies and of ensuring children and families receive coherent services based on their needs. The Green Paper is looking at the issues of key workers and single assessments, and will be informed by the work of the ten information, referral and tracking trailblazers managed by the Children and Young People's Unit.

Income Tax Evasion

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 614W, on fraudulent income tax evasion, how many prosecutions are under way; how many prosecutions have been undertaken but not completed since 1 January 2002; and if he will make a statement. [95253]

Dawn Primarolo: As at 31 January 2003, 23 cases, of which 21 have been registered since 1 January 2002, are under investigation working towards prosecution using the new offence of fraudulent evasion of income tax.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what he estimates the percentage of estates liable to inheritance tax would be if the threshold were raised to (a) £500,000 and (b) £1 million; [95013]

(2) what he estimates the annual cost to the Exchequer would be of raising the inheritance tax threshold to (a) £500,000 and (b) £1 million. [95017]

Dawn Primarolo: The PBR estimate of inheritance tax yield is £2.6 billion for 2003–04. The full year cost of raising the inheritance tax threshold in 2003–04 to (a) £500,000 and (b) £1 million would be £1.6 billion and £2.3 billion respectively. The UK percentage of estates liable to inheritance tax would be about 1 per cent. and less than 0.5 per cent. respectively.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the additional annual revenue from inheritance tax as a result of abolishing the ability to make gifts free of inheritance tax after (a) one year, (b) five years and (c) 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [96524]

Dawn Primarolo: Insufficient data is available on which to base yield estimates.

Inland Revenue Qualifying Regimes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the abolition of the Inland Revenue qualifying regimes; and if he will make a statement. [96195]

Ruth Kelly: The Sandler review of the market for medium and long-term retail savings, which was published last July, recommended two changes to the regime for taxing life insurance products. These changes are the abolition of the qualifying policy regime and the replacement of the so-called 5 per cent. tax-deferral rule which applies to withdrawals.

As we announced in the pre-Budget report, the Government are considering these proposals as part of the Budget process and are consulting the industry about their implications. They have received representations from the insurance industry and friendly society movement. The Association of Friendly Societies and the Association of British Insurers have been in frequent contact with Treasury and Inland Revenue officials. Their discussions include considering how the Sandler recommendation to abolish the qualifying policy regime for new life insurance policies would affect savings through qualifying policies, particularly by those on low incomes.

Large Companies Office

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of the Large Companies Office of the Inland Revenue in collecting tax over the period 1997 to 2002. [94922]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue's Large Business Office (LBO), formed on 1 April 1997, is responsible for dealing with the tax affairs of most of the largest companies and employers operating in the United Kingdom. It ensures such companies' tax affairs are handled by highly knowledgeable and experienced tax officials. The office explains the Inland Revenue's view of how tax law applies in particular circumstances and oversees the process by which large businesses account for the tax they are due to pay.

As part of that process LBO staff make inquiries into companies' tax returns on the basis of an assessment of the risk to the Exchequer. This can result in large adjustments to profits returned for tax, which sometimes require litigation. The additional tax recovered as a result of such LBO action may therefore fluctuate from year to year. The annual yield has been 1998–99—£1.9 billion; 1999–2000—£1.9 billion; 2000–01—£2.2 billion; and 2001–02—£1.6 billion. The office has met the overwhelming majority of its operational targets and has been highly effective, a view confirmed in the Government's 2001 Review of Links with Business and more recent taxpayer research.

Lisbon and Stockholm Objectives

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on progress towards the Lisbon and Stockholm objectives of (a) speeding up liberalisation in areas such as gas, electricity and transport, (b) speeding up liberalisation in postal services, (c) concluding work on proposals to update public procurement rules, (d) ensuring that Community and Government procurement can take place online, (e) setting out a strategy for further co-ordinated action to simplify the regulatory environment, (f) implementing the financial services action plan, (g) ensuring full implementation of the Risk Capital Action Plan, (h) making progress on proposals on takeover bids and (i) concluding the pending tax package on efficient and implemented markets; [96840]

(2) if he will make a statement on progess towards the Lisbon and Stockholm objectives on (a) developing priority actions addressed to specific target groups within member states choosing amongst those actions according to their particular situations and reporting subsequently on their implementation, (b) producing a detailed work programme on the follow-up of the objectives of education and training systems, (c) achieving interim transposition target of 98.5 per cent., (d) presenting a proposal to tackle the barriers identifed in the internal market for services, (e) presenting a strategy for regulatory simplification and quality before the end of 2001, (f) implementing the Financial Services Action Plan, (g) integrating securities market, (h) implementing the Risk Capital Plan and achieving a well-functioning capital market, (i) demonstrating a downward trend in state aid in relation to GDP and (j) agreeing on the tax package as a whole; [96842]

(3) if he will make a statement on progress towards the Lisbon and Stockholm objectives on (a) defining common approaches to maintaining and improving the quality of work, (b) updating existing legislation on implementing the principle of equal treatment of men and women as regards access to employment, vocational training and promotion and working conditions, (c) agreement on a regulatory framework for radio spectrum policy and broadband networks, (d) adopting in co-decision with the European Parliament on the sixth Community Research Framework Programme, (e) examining a specific strategy for mobility within the European Research Area, (f) presenting proposals to promote a more interactive dialogue with the public on issues of science and technology, (g) examining measures required to utilise the full potential of biotechnology, (h) reviewing progress in integrating the sustainable development aims into the Lisbon strategy, (i) evaluating the Luxembourg process and (j) facilitating a successful outcome of COP-6; [96843]

(4) if he will make a statement on progess towards the Lisbon and Stockholm objectives on (a) alleviating the tax pressure on labour and improving the employment and training incentives of tax and benefits systems, (b) redirecting public expenditure towards increasing the relative importance of capital accumulating and supporting research and development, innovation and information technologies, (c) ensuring the long-term sustainability of public finances, (d) facilitating a substantial annual increase in per capital investment in human resources, (e) cutting the number of 18 to 24-year-olds with only lower-secondary level education, (f) developing schools and training centres into multi-purpose local learning centres, (g) creating a European framework to define the basic skills to be provided through lifelong learning, (h) establishing a European diploma for basic IT skills, (i) taking steps to remove obstacles to teachers' mobility, (j) developing a common European format for curricula vitae, (k) giving priority lifelong learning, (l) increasing employment services, (m) furthering all aspects of equal opportunities and making it easier to reconcile working and family life, (n) setting a new benchmark for improved child care provision, (o) raising the total EU employment rate to 70 per cent. and (p) increasing the number of women in employment to 60 per cent.; [96841]

(5) if he will make a statement on progress towards Lisbon and Stockholm objectives on (a) ensuring all schools have access to the internet, (b) all the teachers needed are skilled in the use of computers, (c) mapping of research and development excellence in all member states, (d) improving the environment for private research investment, R&D partnerships and high technology start-ups, (e) taking steps to remove obstacles to the mobility of researchers in Europe and attracting and retaining high-quality researchers in Europe and (f) ensuring a Community patent is available. [96839]

Ruth Kelly: As stated in the 2002 pre-Budget report, the Government will publish a progress report in early 2003 on developments in European economic reform since the February 2002 White Paper "Realising Europe's Potential".

Listing Rules

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions officials from his Department have had with representatives of (a) the business community and (b) the Financial Services Authority concerning reforms of listing rules. [96190]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) is responsible for setting the listing rules (under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000). The FSA are currently conducting a review of the listings rules and consulting widely with the business community. Officials from the Treasury regularly talk to the FSA and business about issues relating to the Rules, including in the context of the review.

Moray Floods (Tax Deferral)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce tax deferral for businesses in Moray affected by flooding; and if he will make a statement. [95272]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 February 2003]: Tax deferral measures were introduced in 2001 specifically to help viable businesses and individuals adversely affected by the foot and mouth disease outbreak.

There are no plans to introduce similar or specific measures for businesses in Moray that have been affected by flooding. However, the Revenue will provide help and support to viable businesses affected by flooding within the limits of its discretion.

National Insurance

Adam Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what spending plans he has for the £18 billion from the surpluses of the National Insurance Fund. [96272]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 7 March 2002, Official Report, column 468W.

National Insurance/Income Tax

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to align further the income tax and national insurance systems; and if he will make a statement. [95726]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no plans for the structural alignment of Tax and National Insurance. The Revenue, however, continues to work with employer representatives and others to look for opportunities to align the tax and National Insurance rules at a practical level while having regard to the need to protect the individuals' benefit entitlement.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to equalise the upper earnings limit of national insurance contributions with the higher rate threshold of income tax; and if he will make a statement. [95727]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government has no such plans.

Non-compliance Investigations

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many non-compliance investigations have been carried out by the large business division of the Inland Revenue in each year since 1990–91; what the average amount of extra tax secured for such non-compliance operations was in each year; and if he will make a statement. [95828]

Dawn Primarolo: The available information about the Inland Revenue's work tackling non-compliance is set out each year in the Inland Revenue Annual Report, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Official Meetings

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings officials from his Department have had with representatives of the business and financial sectors over the last two months; and if he will make a statement on concerns raised at these meetings regarding the level of the FTSE 100 share index. [96835]

Ruth Kelly: Officials regularly meet representatives from business and the financial sector and discuss a range of issues.

Pensions Tax Relief

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax relief on pensions was claimed successfully in the last year for which figures are available, broken down by (a) gender and (b) ten-year age bands. [96598]

Ruth Kelly: Available estimates of the cost of tax relief on private pension contributions are contained in table T7.9 of Inland Revenue Statistics. The latest version is on the Inland Revenue website; http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.Uk/stats/pensions/p t09 1.htm It is not possible to break these estimates down by either gender or age.

Post-60 Employment

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what incentives he is putting in place to encourage employers to take on employees of 60 years and older; and if he will make a statement. [94251]

Dawn Primarolo: Since 1997, this Government have consistently shown their commitment to employment opportunities for all regardless of age.

We are vigorously promoting the benefits of recruiting, training and retaining older workers as part of our Age Positive campaign. We have already spoken to employers, employer organisations, employees and voluntary sector organisations about ways in which the message can be spread further. The Age Positive campaign is going from strength to strength, working to challenge ageist employment practices between now and the implementation of age legislation in 2006. The newest feature of the campaign is the Age Positive website (www.agepositive.gov.uk). It features guidance and good practice case studies for employers including our recent publication "Good Practice in the Recruitment and Retention of Older Workers".

For small and medium sized employers, we have developed a model programme on the business benefits of age diversity and recruitment of the over 50s. To date workshops have been delivered across England and they will be extended to Scotland and Wales from the spring.

'Simplicity security and choice: Working and saving for retirement', published in December 2002, sets out a number of measures that will make the retention of older workers easier. These include encouraging companies to adopt a more flexible approach to retirement, and changes to Inland Revenue rules that will make it possible for older workers to continue to work for the sponsoring employer while drawing their occupational pension.

The Government have also taken steps to improve the financial returns for older people returning to work.

The new Working Tax Credit, which will be introduced in April, includes a return to work element for people aged 50 or over. This is paid for one year following the return to work if a qualifying benefit had been claimed for six months or more. A single person working 16 hours per week will be eligible for Working Tax Credit worth up to £49 per week in their first year following a return to work. Someone over 50 returning to work of 30 hours a week would be eligible for Working Tax Credit of up to £59 per week.

Public Service Pension Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Lynne Jones) on 23 January 2003, Official Report, column 431W, on public service pension schemes, whether statutory change is required to implement proposals for raising the pension age in public service schemes; and whether such a proposal has been put to staff representatives. [95682]

Mr. Boateng: The Government envisage that the higher normal pension age might be introduced in most public service schemes as part of a package of pension changes. These proposals would be subject to consultation with staff representatives and employers. Most of the main public service schemes' rules are set out in Statutory Instruments and there would be consultation with staff representatives before Instruments were laid before Parliament.

Small Business Investment

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the level of investment by small businesses with fewer than 50 employees was in each quarter of each year since 1997. [94850]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Mark Prisk, dated 10 February 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning the level of investment by small businesses with less than 50 employees in each quarter of each year since 1997. (94850)

The level of investment by small businesses with less than 50 employees in each quarter is not available. The closest available information relates to annual data since 1998 from the Annual Business Inquiry (ABI). The table below shows Net Capital Expenditure (excluding VAT) for businesses with less than 50 employees. The estimate for 2001 is provisional.

Level of net capital expenditure (excluding VAT) for businesses with less than 50 employees. Current prices.

Year	£ million
1999	18,551

Note:
The ABI covers all businesses, excluding agriculture, hunting and forestry; fishing; mining and quarrying; electricity, gas and water; financial intermediation; public administration and defence; and parts of education and health of the Standard Industrial Classification Revised 1992 (SIC(92)

Special Advisers and Press Officers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) special advisers and (b) press officers have been employed by his Department in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and at what cost in each year. [92436]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 31 January 2003 by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office.

The number of press officers employed by HM Treasury has remained broadly constant since 1994–95. There are currently seven, in addition to the Head of Communications.

As to cost the total basic salaries for 2000–01 were £196,990 and for 2001–02 were £201,502. Figures for other years are unavailable.

Sustainable Investment

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library communications between the Treasury and the International Monetary Fund regarding the interpretation of the sustainable investment rule, following the request for clarification contained in the concluding statement of the IMF Article IV consultation, published on 9 December 2002. [96239]

Ruth Kelly: The Government have published the IMF's concluding statement. The final IMF report will be discussed at the IMF Board towards the end of February and will be published shortly afterwards.

The sustainable investment rule has been fully described in successive Budget and PBR documents and the HM Treasury book, "Reforming Britain's Economic and Financial Policy" edited by E. Balls and G. O'Donnell.

Tax Compliance Work

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the yield/cost ratio for tax compliance work by the (a) International Business Tax Group and (b) Large Business Office, at the Inland Revenue in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [96610]

Dawn Primarolo: The available information about the Inland Revenue's work tackling non-compliance is set out each year in the Inland Revenue Annual Report, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Tax Credit Helpline

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are employed by the tax credit helpline; and of that number, how many are employed as claim line operators. [94236]

Dawn Primarolo: A helpline was set up in August 2002 to handle detailed inquiries about the two new tax credits—Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit. The number of people employed at the helpline in Great Britain is set out in the table.

Site	Advisers	Team Leaders	Managers/ Support Staff	Total
Peterlee	473	43	20	536
Livingston	256	24	17	297
Merry Hill	270	25	17	312
Dundee	483	46	23	552
Liverpool	170	14	10	194
Total	1,652	152	87	1,891

Notes

1. All figures are for staff in post, whether they work full-time or part-time. The equivalent number of full time staff will be lower.
2. All advisers and team leaders handle calls.
3. Telephone advisers are available to help process claims too, and some use has been made of that flexibility

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases have been dealt with by the tax credits helpline in each month since it was established. [94239]

Dawn Primarolo: A helpline was set up in August 2002 to handle detailed inquiries about the two new tax credits—Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit. The number of calls handled by the helpline in Great Britain in each month since then is set out in the table.

	Calls handled
August 2002	28,225
September 2002	177,347
October 2002	320,400
November 2002	374,553
December 2002	264,671
January 2003	633,717

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many calls have been received by the tax credit helpline in each month since it was established. [94243]

Dawn Primarolo: A helpline was set up in August 2002 to handle detailed enquiries about the two new tax credits—Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit. The number of calls received at the helpline in Great Britain in each month since then is set out in the table.

	Calls received
August 2002	28,453
September 2002	179,484
October 2002	324,381
November 2002	394,205
December 2002	267,757

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which days of the week, and for how many hours on each of those days, the tax credit hotline is operational. [94244]

Dawn Primarolo: A helpline was set up in August 2002 to handle detailed enquiries about the two new tax credits—Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit. The helpline in Great Britain is open from 8 am until 8 pm seven days a week (except Christmas Day, Boxing Day, New Year's Day and Easter Sunday). The freephone response line, set up to take calls generated by the publicity for the new tax credits, is open from 7 am until 11 pm seven days a week.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the tax credits helpline has cost to operate since it was established. [94240]

Dawn Primarolo: A helpline was set up in August 2002 to handle detailed enquiries about the two new tax credits—Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit. Since it was set up until 31 December 2002, operating costs for the helpline in Great Britain are estimated to have been as follows:

Operating cost for tax credits helpline	£ million
Pay	9.46
Other costs	4.6

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what specialist training is given to tax credit helpline operators on the (a) working tax credit and (b) child tax credit. [94242]

Dawn Primarolo: Helpline operators receive training covering all aspects of eligibility for and entitlement to Child Tax Credit and Working Tax Credit (including the childcare element of the Working Tax Credit), as well as the mechanics of claiming and paying the new tax credits.

Tax Evasion

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Inland Revenue in tackling tax evasion and avoidance from 1999 to 2002; and if he will make a statement. [95824]

Dawn Primarolo: Deterring and countering tax evasion and avoidance is a major part of the Inland Revenue's work to ensure that everyone understands and pays what is due. This work ensures that everyone contributes to the UK's needs. The National Audit Office has recently concluded an investigation into the Inland Revenue's effectiveness at countering fraud and will be publishing its report in due course.

Tax Rates (Dividends)

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue on an accruals basis from increasing the basic rate of tax applicable to dividends by 1 per cent. [96306]

Dawn Primarolo: An increase of 1p in the ordinary rate of tax on dividends that was not matched by a corresponding increase in the dividend tax credit, would result in additional accruals yield of £140 million in 2003–04.

This estimate is based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and is consistent with the November 2002 pre-Budget report. This excludes any behavioural response to the tax change.

Tax Returns

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many self-assessment tax returns were (a) issued, (b) received, (c) waiting to be processed and (d) processed in each month since 3 February 2002; and if he will make a statement. [95005]

Dawn Primarolo: The statistical data requested are set out as follows.

Tax year/date	SA ITRs issued	SA ITRs received	SA ITRs processed	SA ITRs waiting to be processed
2000–01
3 February 2002	9,552,433	8,362,361	5,848,319	2,514,042

5 January 2003	9,587,431	5,955,224	4,979,671	975,553
26 January 2003	9,658,087	7,104,965	5,757,379	1,347,586

Tax Revenue

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra tax revenue was secured by the large business division of the Inland Revenue from its non-compliance operations in (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, (c) 2000–01, (d) 2001–02 and (e) 2002–03 to date; and if he will make a statement. [95825]

Dawn Primarolo: The total additional liability arising from work tackling non-compliance in the Large Business Office is set out each year in the Inland Revenue Annual Report, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library. Audited and accurate figures for 2002–03 are not yet available.

Tax-exempt Savings

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the future of tax exempt saving products; and if he will make a statement. [96196]

Ruth Kelly: The Sandler review of the market for medium and long-term retail savings, which was published last July, recommended two changes to the regime for taxing life insurance products. These changes are the abolition of the qualifying policy regime and the replacement of the so-called 5 per cent. tax-deferral rule which applies to withdrawals.

As we announced in the pre-Budget report, the Government are considering these proposals as part of the Budget process and are consulting the industry about their implications. They have has received representations from the insurance industry and friendly society movement. The Association of Friendly Societies and the Association of British Insurers have been in frequent contact with Treasury and Inland Revenue officials. Their discussions include considering how the Sandler recommendation to abolish the qualifying policy regime for new life insurance policies would affect the future of tax exempt saving products.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to allow tax exempt savings products a special exemption to the proposed abolition of qualifying policies; and if he will make a statement. [96197]

Ruth Kelly: The Sandler review of the market for medium and long-term retail savings, which was published last July, recommended two changes to the regime for taxing life insurance products. These changes are the abolition of the qualifying policy regime and the replacement of the so-called 5 per cent. tax-deferral rule which applies to withdrawals.

As we announced in the Pre-Budget Report, the Government is considering these proposals as part of the Budget process and is consulting the industry about their implications, including in relation to tax exempt savings products. We are continuing that consideration and consultation.

Working Families Tax Credit

Caroline Flint: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it will be possible for parents to claim for child care costs under the new working families tax credit. [95937]

Dawn Primarolo: Parents will be able to claim for eligible child care costs under the new Working Tax Credit which will be introduced in April this year.

Ian Lucas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many families were (a) in receipt of and (b) eligible for working families tax credit in each local authority in Wales in the most recent year for which figures are available. [94788]

Dawn Primarolo: For the numbers in receipt of working families tax credit (WFTC), I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Tyne Bridge (Mr. Clelland) on 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 412W. Estimates of the take-up rates of WFTC in 2000–01 in the UK are available on the Inland Revenue website. Such estimates, and estimates of the numbers eligible for WFTC, are not available below the UK level.

World Oil Prices

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment his Department has made of the effects of a conflict with Iraq on world oil prices; [96421]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the effect of problems in the Venezuelan economy on world oil prices. [96422]

Ruth Kelly: Tensions in the Middle East and the export disruption from strike action in Venezuela are both currently increasing uncertainty in the oil market, thus acting to raise oil prices above the level that would be suggested by the underlying supply and demand situation.

TRANSPORT

Aeroplane Pilots (Drug Testing)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the system of drug and alcohol testing in relation to persons in charge of an aeroplane; and if he will make a statement. [96900]

Mr. Jamieson: There is at present no statutory system of drug and alcohol testing for flight crew.

It is an offence under the Air Navigation Order 2000 for flight crew to carry out their duties while under the influence of alcohol or drugs. As part of the process for obtaining an Air Operator Certificate from the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA), airlines are required to establish policies on alcohol and drugs to ensure compliance with this provision. The detailed implementation of such policies is a matter for the airlines but may include testing programmes. In addition, the Air Navigation Order requires pilots to hold a valid medical certificate issued by a person approved by the CAA. Pilots undergo regular medical examinations, which will pay attention to any evidence of excess alcohol intake or substance abuse. There is currently no evidence of a widespread drink or drug problem in the aviation sector.

The Railways and Transport Safety Bill currently before Parliament includes provisions setting a blood/alcohol limit for flight crew and other specified aviation personnel and will give the police power to test suspected offenders.

British Airports Authority (Cross-subsidisation)

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards BAA's cross-subsidisation of Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted. [97229]

Mr. Jamieson: Heathrow, Gatwick and Stansted are subject to economic regulation by the Civil Aviation Authority which has sole responsibility for setting their airport price caps. The CAA's decision will determine BAA's ability to cross-subsidise between airports.

Bus Services (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funding will be provided by his Department for improving bus services in the city of Leeds in each of the next five years. [96820]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department allocates capital funding for integrated transport to the west Yorkshire passenger transport authority (WYPTA) and the five west Yorkshire local authorities in the annual local transport capital expenditure settlement each December, following bids made to central Government through the five-year joint west Yorkshire local transport plan (LTP) the previous July. We also make revenue funding available through the standard spending assessment system. It is then up to WYPTA and the five West Yorkshire local authorities, including Leeds city council, how this funding is distributed and prioritised.

For the 2003–04 financial year, WYPTA and the five local authorities have been awarded £25.8 million for integrated transport. Indicative allocations for 2004–05 and 2005–06 are £26 million and £27.5 million respectively. The 2006–07 and 2007–08 financial years will be covered by the second joint west Yorkshire LTP, which runs from 2006 to 2011, and no indicative allocations are yet available.

In addition, and subject to completion of the statutory processes, £20.9 million has been set aside for improvements to bus services on the A65 Kirkstall road corridor. These improvements include the construction of bus lanes and new bus stops and shelters.

Driving Licences

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of, and how many, reminders sent by the DVLA for drivers to renew their road fund licence, were returned to DVLA as (a) addressee moved and (b) addressee not known at this address since 2000. [94774]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA issued some 36.9 million vehicle excise licence reminders in 2001–02. They are despatched in envelopes bearing a specific message asking for them not to be returned to DVLA if undeliverable. If the addressee has moved, DVLA will normally pick up the new address as soon as the vehicle is relicenced, or a statutory off-road declaration made.

East London Line

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposals made in the Strategic Rail Authority's Strategic Plan 2003 Route Descriptions on the East London Line project. [96614]

Mr. Jamieson: The SRA is continuing to take forward development of this project pending resolution of outstanding planning and funding issues.

Energy Savings Trust

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what Government grant has been given to the Energy Savings Trust in each of the last three years; and what proportion of that grant (a) was allocated on an annual basis to TransportAction and (b) is allocated to TransportEnergy. [96442]

Mr. Jamieson: The funding from my Department to the Energy Saving Trust for cleaner vehicle initiatives for the last three years is:

	£ million
2001–02	29.11
1999–2000	3.6

All of this funding was allocated to TransportAction. TransportAction was re-branded as TransportEnergy in September 2002.

DEFRA also supports various domestic and industrial energy efficiency programmes which are managed by the Energy Saving Trust.

Honiton/Ilminster Road Inquiry

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the determinations of environmental issues considered by the public inquiry into the Honiton/Ilminster road improvement, with which he disagrees. [95985]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The views of the then Secretaries of State for the Environment and Transport on the issues raised at the public inquiries into the A30/A303 Marsh to Honiton and Ilminster to Marsh improvements are contained in their decision letter of 27 January 1997. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the Libraries of the House as soon as possible.

The Orders were not made. The scheme was remitted as part of the London to the south-west and south Wales multi-modal study, which looked at strategic routes from London to the south-west and Wales.

Following the study, the Secretary of State has asked the Highways Agency to carry out further technical work. It is not possible to comment further on the environmental issues until that work is complete.

Low Emission Vehicles

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is on encouragement of the introduction of (a) compressed and (b) liquefied natural gas vehicles. [96437]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government are committed to encouraging the introduction and wider use of clean, low carbon vehicle technologies as set out in "the Powering Future Vehicles Strategy", published in July last year. Compared to conventional diesel vehicles, natural gas vehicles can offer useful air quality, noise and—in some cases—carbon benefits.

The Government are encouraging the wider use of both compressed and liquefied natural gas vehicles primarily through favourable fuel duty incentives and grants towards the cost of procuring natural gas vehicles and supporting the development of refuelling infrastructure through the Department's PowerShift programme.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of government funding for the Energy Savings Trust is allocated as PowerShift grants for lower emission vehicles. [96439]

Mr. Jamieson: For 2001/02, 29% of the Government's total funding for the Energy Saving Trust's transport initiatives was allocated to the PowerShift programme. This amounted to 8.5million out of a total of 29.11 million.

The remaining funding supported the Trust's CleanUp initiative, and the marketing and operational costs of TransportAction.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of total road vehicles in the UK received PowerShift grants in each of the last four years. [96440]

Mr. Jamieson: The proportion of PowerShift funded vehicles as a percentage of new vehicle registrations for the last four years is set out as follows.

2001–02	3,013,126	4,403	0.15
2000–01	2,712,901	5,111	0.19
1999–2000	2,637,402	1,817	0.07
1998–99	2,627,299	748	0.03

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what financial assistance in the last four years his Department has given to encourage the promotion by local authorities of low emission zones; [96443]

(2) what financial measures in the last four years his Department has undertaken to encourage the promotion of low emission zones. [96435]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department has provided £51,000 towards the cost of a three-year research programme run by the National Society for Clean Air into Low Emission Zones. This project examined the potential of such zones for improving air quality and provided local authorities with practical guidance on how best to establish and enforce them. The results of the project to date are available at: www.nsca.org.uk. My Department has also provided £20,000 towards the cost of the London low emission zone study which is being undertaken on behalf of the Greater London Authority and the Association of London Government.

My Department has hosted a number of workshops to help local authorities tackle the problems of air pollution and the possible introduction of low emission zones.

In addition, DEFRA's guidance on air quality includes advice on low emission zones. However, as yet no local authorities have implemented low emission zones.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is on encouragement of the introduction of (a) electric vehicles and (b) hybrid low emission vehicles. [96436]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government has introduced a number of incentives to encourage the wider use of cleaner vehicles and fuels, including battery electric and hybrid vehicles. The recently published Powering Future Vehicles strategy provides a framework for future fiscal and other incentives in the move towards a low carbon transport system.

(a) Electric vehicles currently benefit from the following incentives:

Zero rate of Vehicle Excise Duty (VED)

A lower rate of company car tax

Grants towards the premium cost of purchasing vehicles

No fuel duty on electricity used for recharging batteries

(b) Hybrid vehicles benefit from the these incentives

A lower rate of company car tax

Grants towards the premium cost of purchasing vehicles.

Hybrid vehicles may fall into a lower Vehicle Excise Duty band as a result of their lower CO2 emissions.

In addition, both hybrid and electric vehicle demonstration projects may be eligible for grant funding from the New Vehicle Technology Fund.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) vans and (b) other vehicles have received PowerShift grants over the last four years by (i) category of vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel. [96441]

Mr. Jamieson: Over the last four financial years (1998—2002) PowerShift has funded: (a) 6337 vans and (b) 5742 other vehicles. These 12,079 vehicles can be categorised by these fuel or technology types:

	Vehicles
Liquefied petroleum gas	10,524
Natural gas	217
Battery electric	389
Hybrid	948
Fuel cell	1

Low-cost Airlines (Consumer Protection)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to increase existing levels of consumer protection for flight only customers of low-cost airlines; and if he will make a statement. [97258]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government has recently been involved in extensive discussions at a European level on a proposal for a regulation establishing common rules on compensation and assistance to air passengers in the event of denied boarding and of cancellation or long delays of flights. Political agreement was reached on this proposal at the European Transport Council in December 2002.

This regulation, which will apply to all airlines operating within the European Union, will ensure a higher level of protection for passengers in cases of denied boarding, cancellation and delay. A ministerial letter detailing the outcome of the Transport Council was sent to the Parliamentary Scrutiny Committee on 10 December 2002.

New Transport Infrastructure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the availability of low interest loans from the European Investment Bank for (a) financing repair and renewal of London Underground, (b) the purchase of vehicle fleet by local authorities and (c) new transport infrastructure for the introduction of congestion zones and on emission zones. [96444]

Mr. Jamieson: The European Investment Bank is one of many lenders involved in the tube modernisation plans. The bank might potentially make financing facilities available for the procurement of a clean vehicle fleet or for new infrastructure related to congestion and emission zones. However, any project promoter would need to satisfy the bank that its initiative helped to achieve the objectives of the European Union. And the cost of the project would normally need to exceed €25 million.

Overweight Vehicles

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents there were on UK roads where overweight vehicles were a factor in the accident in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001. [97073]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department does not collect data on whether a vehicle involved in an accident was overladen.

Rail Officials (Conduct Rules)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rules govern the conduct of the (a) chairman of the Strategic Rail Authority, (b) Head of Planning of the Strategic Rail Authority and (c) Rail Regulator in regard to their dealings with their former employers. [94846]

Mr. Jamieson: All public servants are expected to act in good faith and in the best interests of their organisation.

Road Tax

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles were found to be overweight at weigh-bridges in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001; and how many prosecutions were pursued against individuals and companies relating to such vehicles in each of those years. [97071]

Mr. Jamieson: The Police, Local Authorities' Trading Standards and the Vehicle Inspectorate conduct vehicle weighings at weighbridges and other locations to enforce compliance with maximum legal weights in Great Britain. The Department only holds records of weighings conducted by the Vehicle Inspectorate.

The Inspectorate's policy is to weigh only suspect overloaded vehicles and prohibit them from further movement until the load is adjusted to conform to legalrequirements. Overloading is reported to the traffic commissioners for action through the operator licensing system where appropriate. More serious cases and serial offenders are also prosecuted.

The table below shows the results of the Vehicle Inspectorate operations over the last four years:

HGVs
Weighed	48,452	56,607	63,849	75,782

1. Figures include UK and foreign vehicles.

Ryanair (Compensation)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the Civil Aviation Authority's role will be in ensuring compensation for those affected by the cancellation of Buzz Flights by Ryanair; and if he will make a statement. [97257]

Mr. Jamieson: The CAA has no role in what is a commercial matter.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the letters of comfort issued in relation to the Strategic Rail Authority. [96528]

Mr. Jamieson: A copy of the proposed comfort letter to the Strategic Rail Authority was placed in the Libraries of the House on 3 February. It is subject to approval in the normal manner.

TransportEnergy

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the reason was for the re-branding of TransportAction as TransportEnergy; and what the total cost was to the Energy Savings Trust broken down into (a) consultancy fees, (b) publicity, (c) reprinting of stationery and (d) other material costs. [96438]

Mr. Jamieson: In September 2002 the Energy Saving Trust re-branded TransportAction as TransportEnergy as part of a wider exercise to rationalise all of the trust's environmental initiatives, enabling them to deliver their messages with improved effectiveness and cost-efficiency. The term TransportEnergy better reflects the trust's goal of supporting a move to a less energy intensive transport system and is more consistent with the trust's domestic energy efficiency programmes.

No Government funding was used in the re-branding exercise. All re-branding costs were met through the Energy Saving Trust's corporate funds.

Unlicensed Vehicles

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many DVLA staff are employed in monitoring unlicensed vehicles on the public highway in the London borough of Harrow. [96796]

Mr. Jamieson: It is not possible to provide a breakdown of staff specifically for Harrow but the DVLA local office at Stanmore covers most of north London including Harrow. 29 staff at that office work on the enforcement of vehicle excise duty.

Most reports of unlicensed vehicles are submitted to DVLA by police officers and traffic wardens as part of their normal duties.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to speed up the process of impounding unlicensed vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [96797]

Mr. Jamieson: Regulations were amended in April 2002 to reduce the period impounded vehicles have to be kept before they can be disposed of from 35 days to seven or 14 days. The deciding factor is the value of the vehicle. The majority of impounded unlicensed vehicles are now disposed of within 14 days.

The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency has increased the number of wheelclamping teams operating in London from two to four. Plans further to increasethe level of wheelclamping across the UK are being considered as part of the proposals to modernise the vehicle registration and licensing system.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to grant the DVLA further powers to remove unlicensed vehicles from the road; and if he will make a statement. [96799]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA plans to extend partnership working with local authorities to clamp and impound unlicensed vehicles following a successful trial scheme in the London Borough of Newham. Teams working for the boroughs of Wandsworth, Croydon and Lewisham, and Hastings and Southend-on-Sea councils have been trained by DVLA and now, together with Newham, clamp and impound untaxed cars in their areas. These teams complement the existing national contract for wheelclamping untaxed cars.

DVLA is currently in discussion with a further eleven local authorities who have expressed an interest in joining the scheme.

Wales and Borders Franchise

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what requirements his Department has made of companies bidding for the Wales and Borders franchise as to the minimum level of service provision required within the term of the franchise; and if he will make a statement; [96808]

(2) what advice his Department has received from the Strategic Rail Authority on the effects on the level of service provided, in terms of (a) frequency of service and (b) capital investment, of a cut in public support of (i) 10 per cent. and (ii) 20 per cent. to the successful bidder for the Wales and Borders franchise. [96807]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority has asked bidders for the Wales and Borders franchise to provide a baseline bid for maintaining services at or around the current level. Bidders are also being asked for options to increase the level of service and to show what can be provided for 10 per cent. and 20 per cent less subsidy. The bidding process is in progress and bids have yet to be submitted. The outcome will be announced in due course.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION COMMITTEE

Boundary Commission

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the Speaker's Committee on the Electoral Commission what work the Electoral Commission is undertaking to develop policy on the consistency of the rules governing the Boundary Commission with particular regard to the question of parity of size for parliamentary constituencies. [96548]

Mr. Beith: None. The Electoral Commission has no responsibility for this matter at present. Section 16 of the Political Parties, Elections and Referendums Act 2000 provides for the functions of the Boundary Commissions to be transferred to the Electoral Commission, but these provisions have not yet been implemented.

DEFENCE

Afghanistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the international security assistance force in Afghanistan; what reports he has received on military confrontations between that force and Afghan rebels in the past six months; and if he will make a statement. [96295]

Mr. Ingram: I receive regular reports on the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Kabul. While there have been some security incidents, under the excellent leadership of Turkey the ISAF has supported the Islamic Transitional Authority in improving the security and stability of the Afghan capital.

Armed Forces (Deployments)

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effects the use of military personnel for cover during the fire strike has had on the timing of deployments to the Gulf. [95187]

Mr. Ingram: The use of military personnel for cover during the fire strike has had no effect on the timing of deployments related to potential operations against Iraq.

Armilla Patrol

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Armilla Patrol vessel has been on station in the past year. [96936]

Mr. Ingram: A RN frigate or destroyer has provided a permanent presence in the Gulf as part of the Armilla Patrol throughout the past year, as it has done continually since 1980 when the Armilla Patrol commenced. This task is currently being met by HMS Cardiff, with support from the Royal Fleet Auxiliary tanker RFA Bayleaf. HMS Richmond is scheduled to relieve HMS Cardiff in theatre on 9 March 2003.

Atlantic Patrol (North)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the Atlantic Patrol (North) vessel has been on station in the Caribbean since September 2002. [96935]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Grafton was on-station in the Caribbean Area of Responsibility (AOR) between 8 August to 3 December 2002. HMS Grafton returned to the United Kingdom on 13 December, handing over Atlantic Patrol Task (North) duty to HMS Iron Duke on 19 December. HMS Iron Duke deployed for the Caribbean on 23 January 2003. When not on station, the ship allocated to APT(N) was held at a maximum 14 days notice. Throughout the period in question, the duty RFA APT(N) tanker has remained on station providing a permanent presence in the Caribbean AOR.

Biochemical Attack (Gulf)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring procedures will be available to UK troops in the Gulf in the event of (a) biological and (b) chemical attack. [95919]

Mr. Ingram: A wide range of detection and warning systems and testing and decontamination facilities will be available to United Kingdom troops deployed for potential operations in Iraq.

British Military Powerboat Trust

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the potential of the British Military Powerboat Trust for raising public awareness of the (a) role and (b) history of UK coastal forces. [95872]

Mr. Ingram: While no formal assessment has been made of the potential of the British Military Powerboat Trust, the Ministry of Defence is always looking for ways to raise public awareness of our military heritage.

We have good contacts with a number of charitable organisations and preservation societies who are dedicated to the preservation and restoration of historical military equipment, such as the British Military Powerboat Trust.

As an example of this, the 2001–02 edition of "Broadsheet"—the annual magazine of the Chief of the Naval Staff—included a two-page article highlighting the work of the British Military Powerboat Trust. Copies of the magazine are available from the Ministry of Defence.

Civilian Ships

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what security checks are made of crews of civilian ships chartered for military operations; [96510]

(2) what vetting has taken place of crews of vessels chartered by his Department in support of Operation Telic; and if he will make a statement. [96931]

Mr. Ingram: Security checks are carried out for the United Kingdom crews of the Joint Rapid Reaction Force Roll-On/Roll-Off ferries provided to the Ministry of Defence under the PFI arrangement. Such crews are required to be Royal Navy Sponsored Reserves. Special measures are taken when there are any security considerations and these can include the placing of a United Kingdom military escort party on-board chartered commercial vessels.

Congestion Charging

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of reimbursement of the Registration Fee and Congestion Charges for Service Personnel at Wellington Barracks. [97374]

Dr. Moonie: The number of personnel accommodated at Wellington Barracks who have cars is assessed to be around 300. On this basis the estimated annual cost of the reimbursement of the Congestion Charge and the Registration Fee is approximately £42,000. Since most are basic rate tax payers this figure would attract Income Tax and National Insurance Contributions of some £15,000, paid centrally by the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department will reimburse Service Personnel accommodated in publicly funded accommodation within the Congestion Charging Zone the tax payable on the benefits in kind; and if he will make a statement. [97375]

Dr. Moonie: Service Personnel who occupy publicly funded accommodation within the Congestion Charging Zone will be reimbursed Congestion Charge costs for one vehicle only. Income Tax and National Insurance Contributions will be met centrally by the Ministry of Defence.

Defence Spending

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of defence spending in each year from 1990–91 to 2004–05 in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms using 2001–02 prices. [95795]

Mr. Ingram: The figures from 1990–91 to 2001–02 are for outturn expenditure. From 2002–03, outturn expenditure is not yet available. These figures are therefore spending plans for the period. In year additions, such as the net additional cost of operations, are excluded from spending plans. Spending plans are therefore lower than actual outturn expenditure.

Total defence expenditure figures are published annually by the Defence Analytical Services Agency (DASA) in UK Defence Statistics, and prior to 1992, were reported in Volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates. Spending plans for 2003–06 are reported in the Defence Investment Strategy 2002.

[3] From 2003–04, Departments will be controlled on a full Resource Accounting and Budgeting basis. The total figure is the sum of the separate resource and capital Departmental Expenditure Limits, net of depreciation.

Figures are not adjusted to take account of major definitional changes in defence spending and transfers of responsibility between Government Departments.

Field Hospitals

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many beds there are in each (a) regular and (b) reserve field hospital. [96932]

Dr. Moonie: The number of beds to be provided by a Regular or Reserve Field Hospital is operation specific. There is no set standard. The maximum usually provided by a single Field Hospital unit, whether Regular or Reserve, is 200 beds, with 566 medical and support staff required.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel in each reserve field hospital unit have been paid an efficiency bounty. [96933]

Dr. Moonie: The TA bounty is awarded as a result of an individual having been available for service for the past twelve months; having completed the appropriate training; and having received the Commanding Officer's Certificate of Efficiency. Decisions regarding the award of the bounty are only made at the end of the Training Year, in April of each year. The information provided, therefore, refers to the award of the TA bounty at the end of the last Training Year, 2001–02.

Details of the award of the TA bounty to members of each Reserve Field Hospital are as follows:

Fire Dispute

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) officers and (b) other ranks are scheduled to remain on HM ships (i) Exeter, (ii) Glasgow, (iii) Newcastle, (iv) Lancaster, (v) St. Albans and (vi) Southampton during the current phase of the firefighters' strike. [95875]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is shown in the table:

	During strike		As of Monday 10 February
Ship	Officers	Ratings	Officers	Ratings
Exeter	9	122	13	222
Glasgow	14	135	19	221
Newcastle	6	67	6	67
Lancaster	12	95	17	118
St. Albans	5	53	12	120
Southampton	9	40	17	175

During the last phase of the strike the crews of HMS Lancaster, HMS Southampton, HMS St. Albans, HMS Glasgow and HMS Newcastle, while carrying out watches onboard to monitor safety systems and safety and engineering rounds, they did not live onboard. This is known as a dormant routine. HMS Newcastle remains in this routine.

Friendly Fire Casualties

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with United States officials concerning the prevention of friendly fire casualties in joint US/British military operations; and if he will make a statement. [96825]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 10 February 2003]: There have been frequent consultations between the Ministry of Defence and the United States Department of Defense on this topic.

Gas Masks

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what supplies of filter cannisters for gas masks are available; and whether there are sufficient stocks to replace all time-expired cannisters. [95984]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 6 February 2003]: For troops deployed on Operation TELIC, some 180,000 in-life filter canisters for gas masks have been issued. Further stocks are held in reserve and more will be ordered. The canisters were originally designed with a 10-year shelf life. Extensive testing (carried out in 1998) enabled us to extend the life to 15 years. Our oldest stocks were manufactured in 1991 and will not therefore expire until 2006. No soldier will commence operations with time-expired canisters.

Gulf Deployment (Equipment)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) desert T-shirts, (b) shower bags and (c) mosquito nets are part of standard equipment issued to Royal Engineers on deployment to the Gulf. [97299]

Dr. Moonie: Warm weather T-shirts are part of the desert clothing ensemble being supplied to all service personnel deploying in support of Operation Telic. Shower bags are not part of the standard personal equipment issued to service personnel, but will be available as required. Mosquito nets will be issued as personal equipment when required.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether members of the Royal Engineers about to be deployed to the Gulf have been required to purchase (a) desert T-shirts, (b) shower bags and (c) mosquito nets. [97300]

Dr. Moonie: No service personnel about to be deployed in support of Operation Telic are required to purchase desert T-shirts, shower bags or mosquito nets.

Gulf War (Veterans Illnesses)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the budgetary provision for 2002–03 for expenditure on Gulf War veterans' illnesses research projects is, excluding current and planned MOD research into depleted uranium munitions; and what percentage of the departmental budget this represents; [96986]

(2) what the budgetary provision for the year 2004 for expenditure on Gulf War veterans' illnesses research projects is, excluding current and planned MOD research into depleted uranium munitions; and what percentage of the departmental budget this will represent. [96985]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 10 February 2003]: Budgetary provision for research into Gulf veterans' illnesses issues, excluding research into depleted uranium munitions, in the Ministry of Defence's Short Term Plan 2002–03 and 2003–04 is £1,010,000.

This figure represents approximately 0.004 per cent. of MOD's budget for 2002–03 and for 2003–04.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to set up a central database of illnesses suffered by Gulf veterans in the UK. [95920]

Dr. Moonie: Primary health care records for the 53,000 or so veterans of the 1990–91 Gulf conflict are held by their doctors and are not accessible centrally for reasons of patient confidentiality. However, the Ministry of Defence maintains some databases that contain health-related information about Gulf veterans. For example, separate databases exist to support pensions casework; processing potential claims for common law compensation and for recording information about patients who have attended the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme. In addition, data are held on cancer registrations and other cancer information. We have no plans to set up a central database of all illnesses suffered by all Gulf veterans. To do so would be costly and would require individual informed consent from Gulf veterans, about 70 per cent. of whom have now left the armed forces and may therefore be difficult to contact.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the incidence is of (a) lymphoma, (b) motor neurone disease, (c) diabetes, (d) renal cancer and (e) lymphocytic leukaemia in Gulf War veterans. [95921]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has no centralised system for monitoring and recording the health status of Service and ex-Service personnel. Given the significance attached by veterans to cancer, at MOD's request researchers at the University of Manchester are carrying out a study of the incidence of cancers in Gulf veterans. The study is using data provided by the Office for National Statistics' NHS Central Register (NHSCR) on cancer registrations in England and Wales. The study is due to complete in spring 2003. It is expected that the results will then be submitted for publication in a peer reviewed scientific journal.

Of the 3,172 Gulf veterans seen at the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme (GVMAP) as at 31 January 2003, 33 cases of diabetes mellitus, 11 cases of lymphoma (including Hodgkin's and Non-Hodgkin's), seven cases of renal cancer (including renal carcinoma, hypernephroma and cancer of the kidney) and two cases of chronic lymphocytic leukaemia had been diagnosed. No cases of acute lymphocytic leukaemia were seen. MOD does maintain central records of mortality data for Gulf veterans and a comparison group, known as the Era cohort. The most recent data were published on 27 January 2003, Official Report, columns 27–29WS. This included four deaths from Motor Neurone Disease among Gulf veterans and three among the Era cohort. We are not aware of any further cases.

HMS Nottingham

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 28 January 2003, Official Report, column 747W, on HMS Nottingham, how the cost of transportation will be funded from existing funds; and what commitments are to be cut as a result. [96210]

Mr. Ingram: The cost of transporting HMS Nottingham back to the United Kingdom is expected to be funded from the Department's budget for defence-related maritime salvage and recovery activities. There are no plans to cut any commitments.

Iraq

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the strategic lift capability of the armed forces available in the event of a conflict with Iraq. [95882]

Mr. Ingram: The strategic lift capability available to the armed forces covers both air and surface transport. The RAF Air Transport Fleet comprises of VC10, Tristar and C-17 Globemaster aircraft. The surface capability currently comprises roll on/roll off vessels, available to meet the strategic sealift requirement.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people he estimates have been killed by UK and US forces enforcing the no-fly zone in Iraq. [96541]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 7 February 2003]: We are not aware of any civilian fatalities resulting from responses made in self-defence by coalition aircraft patrolling the No Fly Zones.

Coalition aircraft responding to attacks by Iraqi air defences attack only carefully selected military targets. Although we conduct extensive analysis after every attack we are not able to confirm numbers of military fatalities.

Naval Co-operation

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent co-operation there has been between former Eastern bloc countries and the (a) Royal Navy and (b) Royal Marines. [95881]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Defence gave on 28 January 2003, Official Report, column 846W. We have undertaken ships' visits to several former Eastern bloc countries on an opportunity basis; taken former Eastern bloc naval officers on attachment to Royal Navy ships and vice versa; and conducted inward and outward visits by high ranking United Kingdom and former Eastern bloc country Navy and Marines officers. In addition, we have built information exchange links with Russian naval training establishments, and participated in trilateral naval staff talks with the Russians and the US.

Operation Resinate

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the rules of engagement for RAF units deployed to Operation Resinate. [97294]

Mr. Ingram: Appropriate rules of engagement have been authorised for RAF units deployed on Operation Resinate. Rules of engagement are routinely classified as their disclosure could give an enemy information about the permissions and restrictions imposed on our forces.

I am therefore withholding details in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Recalled Soldiers

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers discharged under QR 9.413 have been recalled for service in the contingency plans for the Gulf; and if he will make a statement. [96616]

Dr. Moonie: The call out in connection with current contingency preparations has not yet been concluded and so it is not possible to give a final figure at present. However, up to 0900 on Friday 7 February, eight soldiers previously discharged under Queens Regulations for the Army paragraph 9.413 had been identified for call out.

Retirement

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers took (a) premature voluntary retirement and (b) SNLR from the (i) Footguards, (ii) Scots Division, (iii) Queen's Division, (iv) King's Division, (v) Parachute Division, (vi) Light Division, (vii) R Irish (GS), (viii) R Irish (HS) and (ix) Parachute Regiment in 1998. [96615]

Dr. Moonie: The number of soldiers, who were discharged in 1998 following the approval of their applications for premature voluntary release, or under Queens Regulations for the Army paragraph 9.414 "Services No Longer Required", broken down by Division/Regiment as appropriate, is shown in the following table.

Division/Regiment	Premature voluntary release (on payment)	Services no longer required	Total
Guards Division	45	73	118
Scots Division	12	97	109
Queens Division	16	69	85
Kings Division	18	160	178
R Irish	12	13	25
Light Division	19	52	71
Paragraph	8	26	34
Totals	130	490	620

Separate figures for the Royal Irish (GS) and Royal Irish (HS) are not given because this could identify individuals and breach disclosure and confidentiality policy.

Russian Warship Deployment

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what talks his Department has had with Russian officials about possible Russian warship deployments to the Persian Gulf. [95880]

Mr. Hoon: I am aware of no such discussions.

Security

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve security at his Department's facilities and bases; and if he will make a statement. [96939]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence takes the security of its people and assets very seriously. The threat to the Department's facilities and bases, along with the security measures in force at them, is kept under constant review. It is not Government policy to comment on specific security measures and I am therefore withholding that type of information under Exemption 1 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Service Pay

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces are warned-off for deployment to the Gulf; and how many of these are in receipt of station specific pay, broken down by category. [96315]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 7 February 2003]: Including those forces currently in the region on routine deployments and permanent taskings, a total of around 45,000 servicemen and women have been deployed or are due to deploy to the Middle East region. Detailed planning continues however, and figures are liable to change. Approximately 10,400 of those deploying are in receipt of Local Overseas Allowance.

Tactical Trainer Simulator Centre

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which units have made use of the combined arms tactical trainer simulator centre at Warminster. [96941]

Mr. Ingram: Since its acceptance in May 2002, the following units have used the Combined Arms Tactical Trainer at Warminster (CATT UK); elements of Headquarters 3 (UK) Division, the Queen's Dragoon Guards, the Royal Welsh Fusiliers Recce Platoon, the Princess of Wales's Royal Regiment, the Household Cavalry Regiment, the King's Royal Hussars, the Army Air Corps and elements of the Royal School of Military Engineers.

Vaccine Schedule (Gulf Deployment)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the anthrax vaccine being administered to UK troops deploying to the Gulf is freshly manufactured. [95924]

Dr. Moonie: Yes. All anthrax vaccine currently being administered to United Kingdom Service personnel is licensed and will have been manufactured within the last two years.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops deploying to the Gulf have been vaccinated with smallpox vaccine. [95930]

Dr. Moonie: We have announced plans to vaccinate a cohort of specialist medical personnel and nuclear, biological and chemical specialists against smallpox. I refer my hon. Friend to the written statement I made on 2 December 2002, Official Report, column 60WS. This is not in response to any specific or immediate threat but a sensible precaution, against a potential global threat, which will enable our armed forces to mount an effective response in the event that smallpox is used as a biological weapon.

Vaccination against smallpox for this cohort has commenced. As of 7 February 2003, 38 Service personnel have been vaccinated against smallpox of which 24 have deployed or are deploying to the Gulf. We plan to vaccinate the cohort in phases, with the eventual aim of including all relevant specialist nuclear, biological and chemical personnel and all front-line medical personnel who could deploy on operations. A number of those personnel who will be included in the completed cohort have deployed, are deploying or could deploy on operations to the Gulf. We have sufficient stocks of smallpox vaccine to put our contingency plans into action in the event of a confirmed, suspected or threatened release of smallpox.

Western Isles (Rents)

Mr. MacDonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the rents received by (a) the Ministry of Defence and (b) Defence Estates for the use of its properties in the Western Isles, broken down by (i) location, (ii) payee and (iii) amount paid. [96890]

Dr. Moonie: Defence Estates is an agency of the Ministry of Defence. The location of MOD properties in the Western Isles, together with payee and amount paid is shown in the following table:

Tenant/payee	Location	Rent per annum (£)

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Arsenic

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent air and land assessments have been made at United Mines in Cornwall to ascertain levels of arsenic. [96732]

Alun Michael: As part of the current licence conditions Cornwall Environmental Services monitor quantitative dust levels (PM_{10}) emitting from the United Mines site. This information is audited by the Environment Agency and confirmed through weekly site visits to ensure compliance and placed on the Public Register. In response to concerns from local residents, a limited number of samples were taken by the Environment Agency from stockpiles of naturally occurring subsoil at the landfill and from dried mud deposits along the highway adjacent to the site. Results of analysis of the samples showed arsenic in the 200 to 400 milligrams per kilogram range, which is comparable with levels to be found in mineworking areas.

This information and results of samples from adjacent sites is available on the Public Register (please contact Bodmin Area Customer Services on 01208 78301).

In addition, Carrick District Council commissioned short-term ambient air monitoring at a site close to United Mines in May and June 2001. Particulate matter (PM_{10}) was sampled over a number of days. Concentrations of PM_{10} at the monitoring site were influenced by the operations at the United Mines site but did not exceed Air Quality Strategy objective limits during the time of sampling. Arsenic was not analysed in the sampled particulate matter. Copies of the monitoring report are available from Carrick District Council.

Brazilian Meat Exports

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the quality of Brazilian (a) pigmeat and (b) poultry meat exported to the United Kingdom. [95055]

Margaret Beckett: Imports into the United Kingdom of animal products are governed by European Community legislation, which contains provisions to protect both animal and public health. Under these rules only third countries approved by the Commission on the advice of the Standing Committee on Food Chain and Animal Health may export into the Community, and only from establishments which meet Community hygiene standards. The lists of countries and establishments allowed to export particular products into the Community which includes Brazil is available on the Commission's website at the following address: http://forum.europa.eu.int/irc/sanco/vets/info/data/listes/tableO.html.

EU Community rules do not currently permit the import of pigmeat from Brazil.

Imports of poultry meat from third countries must have been produced to the standards at least equivalent to those laid down in Community legislation. In addition, all consignments of fresh poultry meat imported from third countries are subject to veterinary inspection on entering the EU to ensure that conditions of import have been complied with and to ensure that they have remained in a satisfactory condition during transport.

Responsibility for ensuring that third countries meet these requirements lies with the Food and Veterinary Office (FVO) of the European Commission. FVO reports are published on their website at: http://europa.eu.int/comm/food/fs/inspections/vi/reports/index_en.html.

Recently, unauthorised veterinary medicines namely nitrofurans were found in poultry meat from Brazil. Nitrofurans are not permitted in the EU for use in food producing animals, due to public health concerns. Therefore their residues should not be present in food.

Community rules have been put in place that require all consignments of all poultry meat from Brazil to be tested for the presence of nitrofurans and their metabolites. The consignments must remain at Border Inspection Posts (BIPs) while testing takes place and are only allowed entry into the Community following favourable test results. If nitrofuran residues are detected, the consignment is destroyed.

Environmental Grants

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on (a) the take-up of environmental grants under the modulation arrangements and (b) the financial arrangements for retaining the amounts available but unclaimed. [95517]

Mr. Meacher: (a) I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State on 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 76W.

(b) The modulated amounts are retained by the Rural Payments Agency, and held within their account with Paymaster. Accounts held with Paymaster are not subject to interest. Modulated funds have to be spent within three years of the end of the year in which they are raised.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the administrative procedures required to claim environmental grants under the modulation arrangements; and if she will make a statement. [95518]

Mr. Meacher: In England, modulation receipts are used to fund payments to farmers under agri-environment schemes. The administrative costs of the schemes are not paid for by modulation. This Department is currently reviewing the schemes and part of the review will be looking to simplify the administrative procedures and develop a new "entry-level" tier which has much lower overhead costs.

EU Minimum Air Quality Legislation

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the legislation from the EU on Minimum Air Quality is expected to take effect; and how DEFRA is preparing for this. [97035]

Alun Michael: The EU Air Quality Framework Directive (1996/62/EC) and subsequent daughter directives set limit values for various atmospheric pollutants in ambient air. The First (1999/30/EC) and Second Daughter Directives (2000/69/EC) are transposed into UK law. Limit values for sulphur dioxide, particulate matter, lead and carbon monoxide must be met by 1 January 2005. Limit values for benzene, nitrogen dioxide and oxides of nitrogen must be met by 1 January 2010. The Third Daughter Directive (2002/3/EC), which sets target values for ozone, will be transposed later this year.

We expect the limit values to be met in a majority of locations within the allotted time scale through existing national measures already in place or planned to come into effect. Where further measures are required, these will be taken forward in partnership with local authorities and other relevant organisations through the National Air Quality Strategy.

Farm Incinerators

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on applications for on-farm incinerators to dispose of specified risk material. [95607]

Margaret Beckett: Defra only approves applications for incinerators which fully comply with the legislation. However, the UK is currently awaiting clarification from the European Commission on whether the legislation after 1 May 2003 will permit the incineration of specified risk material in incinerators operating at less than 50kg/hour.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many applications her Department received in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03 to operate incinerators to dispose of specified risk material; how many applications in each year (i) were accepted, (ii) were refused and (iii) await determination; and if she will make a statement. [95611]

Margaret Beckett: Applications to operate incinerators to dispose of specified risk material are made at local level. The details requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, a central register of operators currently approved to operate specified risk material incinerators indicates that as at 31 January 2003 there were 306 approved incinerators in Great Britain.

Flood Insurance

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received from the insurance industry during the last six months about the flood defence and flood management policy. [89627]

Margaret Beckett: The Association of British Insurers met Ministers in September 2002 to discuss their concerns. Following that meeting the ABI announced a Statement of Principles which sought Government commitment to action in seven areas:

actual expenditure on flood defences to meet or exceed that set out in the 2002 Spending Review; implementation of the improvements in the system of flood defence planning set out in Defra's consultation "Flood and coastal defence funding review";

full implementation of PPG25 (Planning Policy Guidance on Development Planning and Flood Risk), with full reporting of the level of compliance by local authorities and consideration of administrative processes in the planned review of PPG25 in 2004;

the Environment Agency's flood asset database to be available to insurers by the beginning of 2003, and publicly available as soon as possible;

early improvements in the flood warning system, and implementation of the Cabinet Office's recent emergency planning review;

full and detailed consideration, including a benefit/cost analysis, to be given to integrated drainage management for England and Wales, similar to that in operation in Scotland; implementation of realistic solutions to sewer flooding including increased investment in improvement programmes and adoption of water companies and sewerage undertakers as statutory consultees in the development planning process.

The Government said they are happy to work with the ABI towards meeting these principles; we are in regular contact with them and will review progress regularly.

Flood Protection

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to give local authorities a power to require riparian owners to take reasonable measures to ensure adequate levels of flood protection. [89630]

Margaret Beckett: The flood and coastal defence operating authorities work under permissive powers meaning that they are under no obligation to undertake such works. In default of action being taken by these authorities, riparian owners are therefore responsible for taking what action they consider necessary (subject in certain cases to the consent of the relevant operating authority) to protect their own properties. I am not, however, persuaded that obligations should be placed on riparian owners in these circumstances.

There are already powers for the operating authorities, including local authorities, to require riparian owners to take remedial action where the proper flow of water is impeded across their land.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what assessment she has made of the lessons for policy in England and Wales of the Scottish arrangement for local authorities to have a statutory duty for flood protection; [89631]

(2) if she will make it her policy to place on local authorities a statutory duty for flood protection. [89632]

Margaret Beckett: I am aware that some advocate adoption of the Scottish approach for the provision of flood defence. However, flood risk issues in Scotland are different from those in England and Wales. We currently operate on the basis of permissive powers, which allows the Environment Agency and other operating authorities to take action where it is considered justifiable against a range of criteria. This allows taxpayers' money to be spent where it is most needed, an approach overwhelmingly supported by respondents to our recent consultation on the Flood and Coastal Defence Funding Review. I expect to announce conclusions on the review as soon as possible.

Litter

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures her Department is looking at to tackle littering arising from the use of plastic and other non-biodegradable packaging. [86024]

Mr. Meacher: We have a number of initiatives under way at present, although none are specifically aimed at non-biodegradable packaging.

At the Urban Summit last October, My right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Rural Affairs (Alun Michael) launched a consultation document called "Living Places—Powers, Rights, Responsibilities". The document sets out 27 options which, if adopted, would make a significant impact on the quality of the local environment. The options include measures to deal with graffiti, fly posting, litter in the aquatic environment, fly tipping and a range of other issues. The consultation closes on 14 February. We will then carefully assess consultees comments and consider, with other Government Departments as necessary, how best to take matters forward.

Defra has provided the environmental charity EnCams with £1 million to develop a Pathfinder program. This involves 27 local authorities in a major programme to draw up good practice guidelines over a wide range of local environmental quality issues. The program is almost completed and preliminary assessments indicate that it has been a success at ground level. Local authorities have been able to use the program to test innovative techniques for improving service delivery and communicating with customers. From over 30 projects, a number have emerged that are worthy of consideration for further development, including the district level Local Environmental Quality Survey which is being developed by EnCams on behalf of Defra.

We have been in discussions with fast food operators and other key stakeholders about the problems associated with fast food waste. We are considering options and will come forward with proposals shortly.

We strongly support the development of biodegradable plastics made from non-fossil sources, providing these will actually be composted and not sent to landfill. A substitute for plastic made from potato starch is now being developed, which is being used for some types of packaging by some retailers. Such material is entirely biodegradable and can be composted. A number of companies are marketing degradable plastics technology and products manufactured from these materials.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many times since 2001 she has taken flights on departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied her on each trip. [95386]

Margaret Beckett: Since June 2001, I have made three trips on departmental duties within the UK which have involved business class air travel. This included a return journey from London to Belfast, where I was accompanied by a private secretary and a press officer; a single journey from London to Newquay, where I was accompanied by my husband; and a single journey from London to Leeds, where I was accompanied by my husband, a private secretary, a special adviser and a press officer.

All travel is undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the "Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers", copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House.

National Parks and Marine Nature Reserves

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress the Government has made since 1997 in the creation of new national parks and marine nature reserves. [97133]

Alun Michael: The Countryside Agency submitted a Designation Order to the Secretary of State for a New Forest National Park in February 2002. A public inquiry into it started last October and is due to end in April. A Designation Order for a South Downs National Park was submitted in February 2003 and is currently subject to public consultation. If there are, as expected, objections to the Order by any of the local authorities, a public inquiry will be held.

No new Marine Nature Reserves have been created since 1997 but the Government are committed to a range of initiatives aimed at protecting the marine environment as outlined in the first Marine Stewardship Report—"Safeguarding Our Seas: A Strategy for the Conservation and Sustainable Development of our Marine Environment". This includes continuing to protect important marine species and habitats under the Habitats and Birds Directives, including extending the protection afforded by these Directives to offshore areas. We are also looking at ways to improve marine nature conservation through our Review of Marine Nature Conservation.

Nuclear Accident

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her Department's role is in the event of a nuclear accident. [93274]

Mr. Meacher: Defra has Lead Department responsibilities for co-ordinating the Government's response to a nuclear accident overseas. This will include issuing appropriate warning messages to official bodies and the public and co-ordinating decision-making on any actions necessary to safeguard public health and other necessary interests. In the event of accidents at UK civil nuclear sites, military sites or weapons accidents, accidents involving radioactive materials in transit, or accidents arising from a nuclear powered satellite falling to earth, the nominated Lead Department would be the Department of Trade and Industry, Ministry of Defence, Department for Transport and Home Office respectively. In these accident scenarios, Defra would act in a supporting capacity to the nominated Lead Department.

Detailed explanations as to the roles of Government Departments and Agencies in the event of a nuclear accident are set out in the Home Office booklet "Dealing with Disaster" and the HSE booklet "Arrangements for Responding to Nuclear Accidents". Both are HMSO publications and copies are held in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what she estimates the volume in cubic metres will be of (a) high level, (b) intermediate level and (c) low level stocks of radioactive waste in (i) 2010, (ii) 2020 and (iii) 2030, assuming projected closure of nuclear power stations occurs. [94971]

Mr. Meacher: Data contained in the 2001 UK Radioactive Waste Inventory, published jointly by my Department and Nirex, indicates that the stocks of high and intermediate level radioactive waste, expressed in cubic metres when in conditioned form, will be:

	(a) HLW	(b) ILW
2010	1,348	106,984
2020	1,510	127,817
2030	1,510	142,642

The volumes of low level waste (LLW) are less certain since LLW has a disposal route and the quantities in stock fluctuate markedly depending on the timing of transfers to Drigg. 15,000 cubic metres was the stock volume of LLW reported in the inventory for 1 April 2001.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether British Nuclear Fuels has provided her Department with a timetable of dates on which radioactive waste arising from the reprocessing of foreign spent nuclear fuel will be returned to country of origin. [95266]

Mr. Meacher: British Nuclear Fuels plc has not provided such a timetable to DEFRA.

Regional Agencies (Eastern Region)

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the locations of the offices of regional bodies and agencies in the Eastern region for which her Department is responsible, broken down by county. [95059]

Alun Michael: I list in the following table the regional bodies and Defra Agencies by County in the Eastern Region. Locations of NDPBs that have supra regional responsibilities but are located in Eastern Region have been excluded.

County	Address	Occupier
Bedford	Wrest Park, Silsoe, Beds, MK45 4HS	EMI
Cambridge	Government Buildings, Brooklands Avenue, Cambridge, Cambs, CB2 2DR	RPA, RDS, HMI, EMI, PHSI

Theft and Fraud

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 103W, if she will estimate the cost of theft and fraud to each of her Department's agencies for the financial year 2001–02. [95080]

Margaret Beckett: The Department's records for the financial year 2001–02 show that of its agencies the Rural Payments Agency reported theft with a cost of £226,000. The Department's other agencies each reported no cost for theft and fraud.

Timber

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when all government suppliers will be issued with guidance regarding government requirements to procure timber from legal and sustainable sources. [95734]

Mr. Meacher: I wrote to Green Ministers in May 2002 enclosing a model specification clause that will help central departments draft their contracts for procuring timber and timber products. The model specification clause was also included in an Information Note that the Treasury's Office of Government Commerce issued in November to remind Departments of the Government's policy on the procurement of timber. It has provided both buyers and suppliers with some clarification of the Government's requirements for timber.

The current guidance does need improving. The Government intends tightening up the definition of acceptable standards for legal timber and forest management and will do more to determine how suppliers' claims for compliance can be assessed efficiently and effectively. The Government is in the process of tendering to set up a central point of expertise on timber to address these issues and other related matters. I cannot be precise about when the centre of expertise will be ready to issue improved guidance but as an indication I would expect it to be later this year.

Village Halls

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many village halls there are (a) in the UK, (b) in the north-west of England and (c) Lancashire; and how many village halls were operating in (i) 1997, (ii) 1998, (iii) 1999, (iv) 2000, (v) 2001 and (vi) 2002. [96727]

Alun Michael: In 1998 Action with Communities in Rural England calculated that there were around 8,900 village halls and similar community buildings in rural England; no analysis of the actual number of village halls at regional or county level, and of the change from year to year, is available centrally.

The Countryside Agency's report "Rural Services in 2000" reveals that in 2000 84.3 per cent. of those parishes in the north-west who responded to their survey had either a village hall or other community meeting place compared with 85 per cent. for England.

Further detailed information about the north-west is available at: http://www.countryside.gov.uk/regional/pdfs/NWRSS.pdf.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many village halls have been in operation every year since 1997 in (a) the East of England, (b) Suffolk and (c) the constituency of Bury St Edmunds. [97388]

Alun Michael: In 1998 Action with Communities in Rural England calculated that there were around 8,900 village halls and similar community buildings in rural England; No analysis of the actual number of village halls at regional or county level, and of the change from year to year, is available centrally.

The Countryside Agency's report "Rural Services in 2000" reveals that in 2000 88.1 per cent. of those parishes in the East of England who responded to their survey had either a village hall or other community meeting place compared with 85 per cent. for England as a whole. The same survey revealed that 68.8 per cent. of settlements had a village or community hall compared with 52 per cent. for England.

Further detailed information about the East of England is available at: http://www.countryside.gov.uk/regional/pdfs/EofERSS.pdf

Waste Incinerator Directive

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many waste incinerators in the UK emit levels of dioxins and other pollutants above those permitted by the EU Waste Incinerator Directive; and if she will make a statement. [96411]

Mr. Meacher: Directive 2000/76/EC on the incineration of waste will apply from 28 December 2005 to incinerators existing before 28 December 2002. The directive's limits for pollutants cover emissions both to air and to water and will be relatively complex in their application, depending in part on the nature of the incinerator. A UK assessment carried out during the negotiation of the directive indicated that there was already a high level of compliance with the limits. In particular, the 11 municipal waste incinerators in England all now already comply with the directive's limit of 0.1 ng/m^3 for dioxins emissions.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Local Government Funding

Mr. Maude: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of total public spending consisted of spending by local authorities in each of the past five years. [96527]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

Figures for local authority own spending and total managed expenditure for the past five years are available on the public spending pages on the Treasury public website, and are updated every time the Office for National Statistics revises these data. The website address is: http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/Documents/Public_Spending_and_Services/pss_index.cfm

Unfair Terms Regulations

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many (a) local authority and (b) housing association tenancy agreements have been received by the OFT for investigation under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts regulations. [96565]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

This historic information is not available as records are not kept by OFT at this level of detail. But OFT believe the numbers involved to be small. OFT are currently considering three complaints about local authority tenancy agreements and another six complaints about housing association tenancy agreements.

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (a) how many terms and (b) what type of terms were revised in the Blyth Valley Borough Council tenancy agreement, as reported in the Office of Fair Trading's Unfair Contract Terms bulletin number 18. [96569]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The published Bulletin shows that 10 terms were revised following action by the Director General of Fair Trading. The terms revised were those considered to have some potential for unfairness. They included clauses binding tenants to other hidden terms, a potential financial penalty, exclusions or limitations on the legal rights of the tenant, an unrestricted right to increase the rent, a term allowing the Council excessive discretion to decide whether the tenant was in breach of the agreement, a term unfairly transferring risk to the tenant and a term which did not meet the requirement that terms be written in plain language.

TREASURY

Independent Financial Advisers

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of the number of independent financial advisers unable to secure professional indemnity insurance. [96629]

Ruth Kelly: The FSA tell me that as at 27 January 2003, 76 per cent. of Independent Financial Advisers (IFAs) (whose Professional Indemnity Insurance (PII) expired between 1 September and 30 November 2002) have told the FSA that they have obtained cover.

An analysis of the information they provided shows that 88 per cent. of IFAs due to renew their cover in September have done so. The figure for October is 85 per cent. and November 66 per cent.

This does not necessarily mean that the other IFAs have not got cover. The FSA tell me that IFAs are reluctant to confirm that they have cover until they have received a cover note even though they may have agreed terms with their broker. This means that there is usually a gap between the expiry of an IFA's PII policy and the receipt of confirmation that the policy has been renewed by the IFA. The FSA are contacting the remaining firms to establish their position.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the adequacy of capacity within the professional indemnity insurance market for independent financial advisers. [96773]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) tell me that they speak to Professional Indemnity Insurance (PII) providers and brokers regularly, and are keeping in close touch with the market.

The FSA have found that 21 insurers have provided cover between September and December 2002. 87 per cent. of policies have been through three main providers.

The FSA are monitoring the market and expect that that more capacity will be introduced soon. This should increase competition and drive down the price of cover. We are also hopeful that some of the proposals and explanations in the FSA's consultation paper 169 ("Professional Indemnity Insurance for Personal Investment Firms: Consultation on Rule Changes; and Discussion of Other Policy Options") will encourage providers to write more cover.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the proportion of independent financial advisers unable to secure professional indemnity insurance who have been refused because they have recommended split capital trusts. [96774]

Ruth Kelly: Underwriters will take a range of factors into account when deciding whether to provide insurance cover. It is not possible to attribute individual underwriting decisions to a single cause.

Money Laundering

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from professional bodies relating to the use of solicitors' offices as centres for money laundering. [97000]

Ruth Kelly: We are currently consulting on the new money laundering regulations.

We have had discussions with the Law Society about the basis on which the UK will implement the EU 2nd money laundering directive which extends money laundering obligations to lawyers. The UK already has a robust system and requires lawyers to file suspicious transaction reports covering money laundering unless excepted by legal professional privilege. The new directive will, through the proposed money laundering regulations 2003, extend various other obligations such as appointment of a Money Laundering Reporting Officer, customer identification and reporting, to lawyers that will further strengthen the UK system.

Barnett Formula

Adam Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to (a) review, (b) revise and (c) replace the Barnett Formula for the allocation of public expenditure to (i) Wales, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Northern Ireland. [97247]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Watts) on 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 27W.

Child Care Tax Credit

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend the child care tax credit to informal carers of children. [96533]

Dawn Primarolo: The child care tax credit in the working families' tax credit supports families who pay for approved child care regulated by the appropriate authorities who provide assurance of quality and safety. The eligibility criteria for the child care tax credit are kept under constant review. With the introduction of the working tax credit in April, support will also be available for approved child care provided in the child's own home.

Child Poverty

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which definition of poverty the Government will use to assess progress in meeting its targets to reduce child poverty. [96504]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have a PSA target to reduce the number of children in low-income households by a quarter by 2004–05 compared with 1998–99, as a contribution towards the broader target of halving child poverty by 2010 and eradicating it by 2020. The technical note for this PSA, published on DWP and HMT websites, provides details. Low-income households are defined as those with less than 60 per cent. of contemporary median income. Progress is being measured on both a before housing costs and an after housing costs basis.

Low income is of course central to poverty. But poverty is a complex, multi-dimensional issue, affecting many other aspects of children's lives, including health, housing, the quality of their environment and opportunities to learn. In April 2002 the Government launched a consultation exercise to decide the best way to measure poverty in the long term, to help target policies and enable the Government to be held to account over its long-term targets. Results will be published by spring 2003.

Compulsory Pensions

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy on making individual pension schemes compulsory. [96452]

Mr. McCartney: I have been asked to reply.

We believe that the current voluntarist approach for occupational and personal pensions is the right way forward considering the UK's pension system. The UK has a long tradition of voluntary partnership between individuals, employers, financial services industry and the Government. The continued success of this partnership depends on all partners playing their part. Our Green Paper, "Simplicity, Security and Choice: Working and Saving for Retirement" (Cm5677), contained proposals to allow employers to make membership of their scheme a condition of employment for all new employees. The Green Paper also announced the setting up of an independent pensions commission, which will be chaired by Adair Turner, to monitor and assess trends in occupational and private pensions and long-term saving. On the basis of this assessment we will decide whether there is a case for moving beyond the current voluntarist approach.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what safeguards are in place to prevent misuse of the Inland Revenue computer database of individuals' tax records; [92772]

(2) what plans he has to investigate the misuse of the Inland Revenue computer database of individuals' tax records; [92820]

(3) what safeguards are in place to prevent breaches of the Data Protection Act 1998 by Inland Revenue staff. [92774]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue takes the misuse of any of its computer systems, and the confidentiality of the information it holds on its customers, extremely seriously. The Department can and does track computer use by its staff and takes a very hard line with anyone who misuses its computer systems, with sanctions up to and including dismissal and prosecution. Its procedures for monitoring access to its computer systems are kept constantly under review.

Disabled Children

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to make an economic analysis of the investment required to ensure that government programmes aimed at lifting children out of poverty reach disabled children. [96314]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government's strategy for tackling child poverty-for all children-is set out in the 2001 Pre-Budget Report document "Tackling child poverty: giving every child the best possible start in life". This includes measures to guarantee a decent family income for families with disabled children, and initiatives to ensure these families have access to high-quality public services.

In recognition of the fact that families with disabled children need extra help, in April 2002 the disabled child premium was increased by £5 a week on top of the normal uprating, to £35.50. In April 2003, it will rise again by £5 above inflation, to more than £40 a week on top of basic Income Support or tax credits, benefiting around 80,000 children. In addition, the mobility component of Disability Living Allowance was extended to three and four-year-olds in April 2002, providing an extra £39.30 a week to those families.

The Government has also introduced a number of measures to improve the level of public service support available to families with disabled children. The Schools Access Initiative programme provides a programme of funding to help mainstream schools provide help to pupils with disabilities. Quality Protects, a five year initiative to improve services and outcomes for children in need, also takes forward projects to support disabled children and their families. And on its introduction by the end of this year the Children's National Service Framework will set general principles and standards for children's services, including services for children with disabilities and special needs.

Equitable Life

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what indications he has received from the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration on when he can expect to receive his report into Equitable Life. [96588]

Ruth Kelly: The Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration is an Officer of the House and, as such, is independent of the Government. It is, therefore, entirely a matter for the Commissioner to determine the timetable for producing her report into Equitable Life.

The Commissioner wrote to all Members on 5 December 2002 with an update on the progress of her investigation into Equitable Life. In that letter she said that she did not expect to report before June 2003.

Euro

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 3 February 2003 Official Report, column 29W, on the euro, for what reason he was unable to state who is undertaking the background studies; and if he will make a statement. [97264]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the comments I made to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) during the Adjournment Debate on 5 March 2002, Official Report, column 268.

Formal Economy

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people the Inland Revenue moved from the informal to the formal economy in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [96546]

Dawn Primarolo: In his report, "The Informal Economy" in March 2000, Lord Grabiner defined the informal economy as usually meaning any undeclared economic activity. There is no comprehensive information about the number of people who as a result of the Inland Revenue's efforts, especially in deterring non-compliance, have declared economic activity that might have gone undeclared in the past.

Following Lord Grabiner's report, the Inland Revenue set out in their last two annual reports details of the number of people who had been working in the informal economy and whom they subsequently identified and registered as self assessment taxpayers. Copies of Inland Revenue annual reports are in the House of Commons Library.

Landfill

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what modelling his Department has carried out on the level of landfill tax necessary to meet the legal obligations of the landfill directive (a) to reduce the landfilling of biodegradable waste to 75 per cent. of that of 1995 levels by 2006, (b) to reduce the landfilling of biodegradable waste to 50 per cent. of that of 1995 levels by 2009 and (c) to reduce the landfilling of biodegradable waste to 33 per cent. of that of 1995 levels by 2016. [96401]

John Healey: Extensive modelling has been carried out which shows that a standard landfill tax rate of £35 per tonne is necessary in the medium to long term to achieve significant reductions in waste disposed at landfill, and the corresponding economic and environmental benefits. This is reflected in paragraph 7.51 of the 2002 pre-Budget report. The Government are developing a comprehensive package of policies, in response to those recommended in the recent Cabinet Office Strategy Unit report, to ensure that the targets set by the landfill directive are met. This will include the system of tradable landfill allowances provided for by the Waste and Emissions Trading Bill and the reforms of the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme as well as the proposed increases in the landfill tax.

Non-compliance Action

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much additional revenue has been raised in each of the last 10 years as a consequence of non-compliance action taken by the Inland Revenue, broken down by (a) the large business office, (b) tax offices and (c) other specialist offices; and if he will make a statement. [96547]

Dawn Primarolo: This information is set out each year in the Inland Revenue annual report, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library.

Renewable Energy

Norman Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes in unit payments for electricity have resulted from the switch by (a) Customs and Excise and (b) the Office for National Statistics to purchasing renewable energy which is exempt from the climate change levy. [96481]

John Healey: The changes in unit payment at designated green sites are as follows:

(a) Customs and Excise—0.086 per cent. on average higher than in 2001.

(b) Office for National Statistics—0.089 per cent. higher than at April 2000.

These increases in unit prices are more than offset by reductions achieved by qualifying for CCL exemptions.

Stability and Growth Pact

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent assessment he has made of whether Britain's fiscal stance meets the Stability and Growth Pact. [96427]

Ruth Kelly: As set out in the 2002 Pre-Budget Report and the 2002 UK Convergence Programme—submitted in line with the Stability and Growth Pact, the UK's latest fiscal projections are consistent with a prudent interpretation of the Stability and Growth Pact, which takes into account the economic cycle, sustainability and the important role of public investment.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the likely effect of abolition of stamp duty on (a) share transactions and (b) the UK economy. [96424]

Ruth Kelly: The 2002 Pre-Budget forecast of revenue from duty on transactions in shares, and hence the direct yield cost of abolition, is £2.2 billion in 2003–04. This estimate makes no allowance for the effect on other taxes arising from the wider impact abolition may have on the economy.

We have been presented with various estimates of the impact on the economy, but in practice there is no convincing evidence that stamp duty on shares significantly affects either UK companies or the UK markets. As with all taxes, stamp duty on shares has to be understood in the context of the revenue raised, which would have to be found elsewhere if the tax were abolished.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Commonwealth Development Corporation Vehicle Fleet

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) at what annual rate the Commonwealth Development Corporation renews its vehicle fleet, broken down by volume and percentage for each category of vehicle, type of power unit, and type of fuel; [96977]

(2) what proportion of vehicles each NHS trust renewed in their vehicle fleets, broken down by volume and percentage for each trust and by category of vehicle, type of power unit, and type of fuel in each of the last five years. [96594]

Clare Short [holding answer 10 February 2003]: CDC Group plc (formerly the Commonwealth Development Corporation) own one saloon-car in the UK, which is renewed every four years. They do not maintain detailed central records of the vehicles operated by their overseas offices and it would incur disproportionate cost to collect this information.

EU Aid Budget

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures are in place to ensure that the annual aid budget of the European Union is spent properly. [96781]

Clare Short: In November 2000 we secured a commitment by the European Commission that poverty reduction should be the central objective of the EC's programmes in developing countries. We also worked with others to put in place a reform package which is designed to simplify the commission's aid instruments, reduce the number of budget lines and work through country strategies aligned to partner country poverty reduction strategy plans. The commission spent 43 per cent. of its overseas development assistance in 2001 in low income countries. This is a poor allocation of aid in terms of poverty reduction effectiveness. We are working to try to help ensure that aid is spent more effectively, mainly by trying to influence the annual budget setting process, where increasing the proportion of assistance to Asia, and to key international initiatives like the Global Health Fund are priorities.

My Department plays a full part in the scrutiny of strategies at the regional and country levels and responds to the commission's Annual Report on its operations and the opinions of the European Court of Auditors. We maintain a close dialogue with the institutions in Brussels and in-country to strengthen sector and programme priorities and implementation.

Renewable Energy

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what changes in unit payments for electricity have resulted from the switch by her Department to purchasing renewable energy which is exempt from the Climate Change Levy. [96487]

Clare Short: Since July 2002 the supply of DFID's electricity to our London headquarters has been under a new contract which provides that 100 per cent. of the electricity is generated from renewable sources. Because of the market at the time, this contract also resulted in a decrease in the unit cost over the previous arrangement from 4p KWH plus climate change levy 0.43p, total 4.43p KWH to 2.79p KWH plus 0.43p green levy for renewable, total 3.22p KWH, all plus VAT.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of reports from Zimbabwe that maize earmarked for starving Zimbabweans is unaccounted for; what representations she (a) has made and (b) plans to make to the World Food Programme on this matter; what assessment she has made of the impact this will have on the people of Zimbabwe; and if she will make a statement. [97078]

Clare Short: A recent report by the Zimbabwe National Vulnerability Assessment Committee notes an apparent discrepancy of around 200,000 tonnes of maize available from all sources for the period April to December 2002 and the actual distribution of food in the country. It is important to be clear that this discrepancy relates to government distributed food, there is no discrepancy in donor funded imports and food distributions made through non-governmental organisations.

The discrepancy may partly arise from ill judged official price controls that make maize more valuable to the producer if exported. We expect that a proportion of the domestic maize harvest will have been smuggled out of Zimbabwe. It is not possible to quantify this with any accuracy.

The Government of Zimbabwe reports that it has imported 650,000 tonnes of maize in the period and has distributed it through the national Grain Marketing Board. The UN has offered to assist in the validation of GMB figures, and has sought clarification of food kept for strategic purposes such as feeding the armed forces, or sold at port of entry to pay for transport and milling. The UN is seeking clarification on behalf of the international community and to help ensure that adequate levels of assistance reach vulnerable Zimbabweans.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what the basis is of his assertion in his statement on Iraq on 3 February that the disarming of South Africa of its nuclear weapons, along with the verification of this action, took a matter of weeks. [96140]

The Prime Minister: The reference in my statement of 3 February was intended to illustrate that the process of disarmament of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction need not be a long drawn out one, provided Iraq gives full co-operation with the UN inspection teams, as required under UNSCR 1441. It need only be a matter of weeks for the UN inspectors to be able to report that Iraq is demonstrating a firm commitment to full and active co-operation with UN inspectors.

In March 1993 the South African Government invited the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to report on the status of their former nuclear weapons programme. An IAEA technical team visited South Africa for this purpose from 22 April to 4 May and its preliminary assessment was reported to the board that month. A final assessment was made to the board in September 1993.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Accountancy Foundation

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research she (a) commissioned and (b) plans to commission into the effectiveness of the Accountancy Foundation in regulating the accountancy profession; and if she will make a statement. [96428]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The review of the regulatory regime of the accountancy profession was announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 24 July 2002. Its remit was to review the current arrangements for the regulation of the accountancy and audit professions; to consider whether revised arrangements and structures are necessary to provide assurance to the public that these are effective; and, if so, to recommend what form they should take. The review, which was the subject of a wide public consultation, focused on the role of the Accountancy Foundation and its related bodies in overseeing the regulatory functions of the professional accountancy bodies.

In her statement to Parliament on 29 January my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said that the Financial Reporting Council will assume the functions of the Accountancy Foundation. The Government has no further plans to commission research into the effectiveness of the Accountancy Foundation.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the investigation and discipline board of the Accountancy Foundation will be established; and what research she will be commissioning into its effectiveness. [96429]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department of Trade and Industry is chairing a steering group to drive forward implementation of all the recommendations of the review of the regulatory regime of the accountancy profession, including transferring the functions of the existing Investigation and Discipline Board (IDB) within the new regulatory body. The new arrangements will be brought into operation as quickly and effectively as possible.

One of the recommendations of the review is that the Financial Reporting Council should make appropriate formal arrangements to account to stakeholders for delivery of its objectives. The Government currently has no plans to carry out its own research into the effectiveness of the IDB.

Intellectual Property Rights

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions she has had with the (a) Bar Council and (b) Law Society on the European Commission's proposal for a directive to harmonise national laws on the means of enforcing intellectual property rights and to establish a general framework for the exchange of information between the responsible national authorities; and if she will make a statement. [96577]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Commission adopted a proposal for a directive on measures and procedures to ensure the enforcement of intellectual property rights on 30 January (a provisional text can be found at http://www.europa.eu.int/comm/internal/market/en/intprop/news/index.htm). We will consult interested parties including the Bar Council and the Law Society when the Commission makes the final text available. In the absence of a finalised proposal my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has not had any recent discussions with the Bar Council or Law Society.

Arms Exports

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of her Department's financial support for arms exports in each year from 1992–93 to 2004–05; and if she will make a statement. [96642]

Alan Johnson: The Department does not offer financial support for arms exports. This is a matter for the Ministry of Defence and its Defence Exports Service Organisation.

Defence Research and Development

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of her Department's total expenditure on defence research and development in each year from 1992–93 to 2004–05 (planned); and if she will make a statement. [96641]

Alan Johnson: The Department does not fund defence related research. Expenditure on R&D to meet the UK's defence needs is a matter for the Ministry of Defence. I understand that the Ministry's Defence Analytical Services Agency, whose website is at http://www.dasa.mod.uk produces defence related statistics, including information on defence R&D expenditure.

Space Programmes Expenditure

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of her Department's total spending on space programmes in each year from 1990–91 to 2004–05 (planned); and if she will make a statement. [95804]

Ms Hewitt: The figures below list the total spending on space programmes for the financial years 1990–91 to 2004–05 by the DTI and the Office of Science and Technology, which funds the space activities of the Natural Environment Research Council and the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council (and funded the latter's predecessor, the Science and Engineering Research Council, until 1993). The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry assumed responsibility for the Office of Science and Technology in 1995.

1990–91	131	1998–99	138

Notes: Expenditure 1990–01 to 1999–2000 on a cash basis
Expenditure for 2000–01 onwards on a full resource accounting and budgeting basis.

Manufacturing Advisory Service

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of the cost of the Manufacturing Advisory Service for each year from 1999–2000 to 2004–05 (planned). [95812]

Alan Johnson: The total financial liability for the Department (funded from the Innovation Budget) is £14.2 million (£800,000 within budget) as summarised by year in the following table.

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04	2004–05	Total
RCME	0	0	561	4,745	4,351	3,319	12,976
National network	0	0	472	352	344	40	1,208
Overall total	0	0	1,033	5,097	4,695	3,359	14,184

Chemical Industry

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of her Department's spending on support for the chemical industry in each year from 2000–01 to 2004–05 (planned); what the major elements are of this expenditure; and if she will make a statement. [95815]

Alan Johnson: Total DTI support relevant to the chemicals industry (excluding the pharmaceutical and biotechnology sectors) is set out in the table:

Financial year	Total (£ million)
2000–01 Actual	28.2
2001–02 Actual	37.7
2002–03 Budget	36.5
2003–04 Plans	21.5
2004–05 Plans	14.7

The major elements of this funding are:

(a) grants for research funded through the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council (EPSRC). This includes collaborative research between universities and industry and fundamental research under its chemistry programme relevant to the chemicals sector;

(b) DTI's innovation programmes, including SMART awards, Faradays and the Process Industries Centre for Manufacturing Excellence;

(c) Regional selective assistance (RSA) to specific companies; and

(d) support for Laboratory of the Government Chemist.

The chemicals industry also benefits from support from the regional development agencies, and generic support through channels such as the Small Business Service and the Manufacturing Advisory Service. Information on this support is not available for specific sectors.

Notes:

1. Information on detailed annual spend by EPSRC is not available on a sectoral basis over this period. The figures provided include estimates of annual spending of £10.6 million on research and £2.1 million on training packages, based on the proportion spent on chemicals in 2000.
2. Support through RSA is related to applications for support by specific companies. Figures for this element are not therefore available for future years.
3. DTI support for the chemicals sector is being reviewed along with the rest of the Department's business support. A newly created Investment Committee will make recommendations for future business support activities in order to drive up productivity. Given these changes it is difficult to predict overall spending for 2003–04 and 2004–05.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of total spending by British Trade International in each year from 1990–91 to 2004–05 (planned). [95830]

Ms Hewitt: Funding of British Trade International since its establishment in May 1999 is as follows:

Budget £millions	1999–2000 Outturn	2000–01 Outturn	2001–02 Outturn	2002–03 Plans	2003–04 Plans	2004–05 Plans
Programme	72	93	76	92	96	97
Admin
DTI	28	31	27	35	35	38
FCO	n/a	156	136	140	141	143
Capital DTI	0	0	5	3	0	0
FCO	n/a	0	1	1	0	0

FCO admin spend for 2001–02 represents the net operating costs as set out in the FCO Expenditure Allocation Report 2001–02. The FCO's budget for British Trade International for 2003–04 onwards has not yet been set; the above figures are estimates. There are no comparable FCO figures available for 1999–2000.

E-Commerce

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total volume was of UK e-commerce transactions in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [96754]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 10 February 2003]: The Office for National Statistics (ONS) e-commerce survey of UK businesses reports on the value of sales made over the internet by UK businesses (excluding the financial sector).

Figures for 2002 are not yet available; they are due to be published by ONS in October this year.

For 2001, the survey showed a total of £18.4 billion sales, accounting for 1 per cent. of the total value of sales for those sectors covered.

For 2000, the survey showed a total of £12 billion sales over the internet. However, the 2000 survey covered only businesses with 10 employees or more. The corresponding figure for 2001 for businesses with 10 employees or more was £17 billion.

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if the aims of the 1999 DTI report to make Britain the best environment in the world for e-commerce by 2002, set out in "e-commerce @ its.best.uk" fig. 1.12, page 3, has been met. [97370]

Mr. Timms: The International Benchmarking Study 2000 prepared by Booz Alien Hamilton for the Office of the e-Envoy and the DTI ranks the UK as having the second best environment in the world for e-commerce, second only to the USA.

The study attributes this achievement to strong venture capital markets, competitive internet access costs on broadband and dial up, strong leadership of the e-agenda and a very supportive regulatory environment. UK broadband prices have reduced from among the most expensive in the G7 to amongst the cheapest.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times since 2001 she has taken flights on departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied her on each trip. [95394]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Nuclear Industry

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much (a) low, (b) intermediate and (c) high level waste will be produced as a result of BNFL's continued reprocessing of spent fuel from British Energy's advanced gas-cooled reactors. [91923]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

There are contracts for the reprocessing of about 65 per cent. of the spent fuel from British Energy's advanced gas-cooled reactors. If all of the spent fuel was reprocessed, conditioned waste volumes are estimated to be a maximum of about 28,000 m^3 of low-level waste, 14,000 m^3 of intermediate-level waste and 470 m^3 of high-level waste.

Post Office Closures

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) rural and (b) urban post offices have closed in each of the last 12 months (i) in total and (ii) broken down by region. [97100]

Mr. Timms: I understand from Post Office Ltd. that the information requested is available only on a quarterly basis giving net closures/openings as follows:

Post Offices (Yorkshire)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the financial loss to post offices in (a) Haltemprice and Howden and (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire as a result of the change in the payment of benefits from over-the-counter to direct bank transfer. [96710]

Mr. Timms: No such assessment has been made. The migration of benefit payment to ACT begins this year and the Post Office's strategy is to respond to that challenge with a range of banking and other services. How the migration of benefit payments affects the revenue of post offices will depend on a number of factors, not least how benefit recipients and other post office customers respond to change. The income from the various contracts Post Office Ltd. has with the spending Departments and various financial institutions, and the remuneration of sub-postmasters for banking services, is a commercial matter between the parties.

Stop Now Orders

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Stop Now Orders (EC Directive) Regulations injunctions have been sought against companies and individuals since March 2002, broken down by each UK public qualified entity. [96755]

Ms Hewitt: Since March 2002, six Stop Now Orders have been sought and obtained from the courts. Four of these were obtained by Trading Standards authorities and two by the Office of Fair Trading.

Vehicle Fleets

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what progress has been made, by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each (i) category of vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel, on an annual basis, over each of the past three years, in renewal of the Post Office's vehicle fleet on a lower emission basis; [96446]

(2) what the annual rate is at which the Post Office has renewed its vehicle fleet, by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each category of (i) vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel over the last three years. [96451]

Mr. Timms: These are matters that fall within the day-to-day responsibility of Royal Mail. I have therefore asked the Chairman to reply direct to my hon. Friend.

Waterloo Road Post Office

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what she estimates will be the effect on the Waterloo area of the closure of the Waterloo Road Post Office. [97333]

Mr. Timms: Decisions on post office closures are an operational matter for the company. Before closure of any post office is decided, Post Office Ltd. carries out a formal consultation process in accordance with the Code of Practice on branch closures, agreed with Postwatch.

HEALTH

Barnet Hospital

15. Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on services at Barnet hospital. [96687]

Ms Blears: Services at Barnet Hospital are improving but there is much more that needs to be done. Inpatients and outpatients are waiting for shorter periods and recent improvements in practice in the accident and emergency department will also ensure shorter waits. Public and staff are being involved in the further development of services locally.

Foundation Hospitals

16. Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, whether he plans to extend foundation status to all hospitals in England and Wales; [96688]

18. Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of proposed foundation hospitals. [96690]

Mr. Hutton: "A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts" sets out proposals for NHS Foundation Trusts and invites applications for the first phase from current acute and specialist NHS 3-star Trusts. Legislation will be placed before the House to establish NHS Foundation Trusts. The eligibility criteria for NHS Foundation Trusts will be kept under review.

Hospital Mergers

19. Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies he has undertaken on the effect of hospital mergers on clinical performance. [96692]

Mr. Hutton: Hospital mergers are changes of organisational structures rather than changes to services. Each case has to be considered on its merits, taking local circumstances into account. One study covering 25 trusts in London did consider the effect of mergers. It found that while there were risks in the process, given the diversion of managerial focus, there was also evidence of a number of benefits, including greater sharing of good practice.

NHS Administrators

20. Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many administrators are employed in the NHS. [96693]

Mr. Hutton: There are 27,424 managers and senior managers employed in the NHS and 184,229 clerical and administrative staff. (Latest DH workforce census data as at 30 September 2001). Of the 184,229 clerical and administrative staff over half of these staff are providing direct support to health professionals in the delivery of care to patients, such as medical secretarial and radiography services.

Consultants Contracts

21. Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on consultants contracts. [96694]

Mr. Hutton: We announced a new framework of incentives and rewards for NHS consultants to the House on Thursday 23 January. The new framework will enable trusts to ensure greater rewards for those consultants who do most for NHS patients. It will give flexibility to trusts locally in choosing how best to use extra resources to reward consultants, reform working practices and improve patient services.

We are now consulting on the framework, with a view to beginning implementation from this April.

Worcestershire Royal Acute Hospital

22. Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the bed capacity at Worcestershire Royal Acute hospital. [96695]

Mr. Lammy: Bed numbers have remained constant since the opening of the new Worcestershire Royal Hospital in Worcester. There are approximately 1,400 acute beds and community based beds available across the county of Worcestershire compared to 1,387 in 1998–99.

NHS Dentistry (Somerset)

23. Mr. Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of NHS dentistry in Somerset. [96696]

Ms Blears: The Government are committed to providing National Health Service dentistry for all who need and seek it. We recognise, however, that there are some areas of the country, including parts of Somerset, where it is difficult to get access to an NHS dentist. For this reason more than £3.5 million additional investment is being made over two years in Somerset (2001/02 and 2002/03) to establish a ental access centre to treat non-registered patients.

I can report that Somerset Coast Primary Care Trust is reaching dental access levels of 75 per cent. and this is expected to improve with the opening of a new practice. Taunton Deane Primary Care Trust is achieving 100 per cent. access levels for routine dental care; and South Somerset PCT has recently recruited an additional general dental practitioner.

Bowel Cancer

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce screening for bowel cancer; and what assessment he has made of its effectiveness. [96074]

Ms Blears: The Government's commitment to a national screening programme for bowel cancer will be taken forward by a new national health service bowel cancer programme, launched on 4 February 2002 in London at a conference of experts from a wide variety of backgrounds, including the voluntary sector. The programme will be led by the national cancer director, and will concentrate on developing a national screening programme for bowel cancer, streamlining care for symptomatic patients expansion and development, and a communications strategy for the public and professionals.

Government-funded pilots into faecal occult blood (FOB) testing for bowel cancer screening will report in the spring. However, the choice of screening methodology for bowel cancer screening is not clear cut between FOB testing and flexible sigmoidoscopy. The NHS bowel cancer programme will consider which method, or a combination of methods is the most appropriate for a bowel cancer screening programme in England.

Children (Sport)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of children undertook at least one hour's sporting activity each week on average each year since 1997. [92064]

Mr. Caborn: I have been asked to reply.

Annual information in this form is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, Sport England carried out a survey of young people (aged 6 to 16) in 1994,1999 and 2002. The 1999 survey found that, overall, 82 per cent. of children spent at least one hour a week in PE lessons. Results from the 2002 survey will be published by Sport England in March.

Clinical Negligence Claims

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reason is for the delay in implementing the reform proposals outlined in the Government's response to the Committee of Public Accounts 37th report of 2001–02, "Handling Clinical Negligence Claims in England"; and when the proposed White Paper will be published. [96691]

Mr. Lammy: Clinical negligence is a complex issue needing extensive consultation, and review of published literature and reports. The Chief Medical Officer is working up a comprehensive report outlining proposals to make arrangements fairer for those suffering injury through negligent national health service treatment.

Community Care

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on how he plans to distribute the £100 million to offset the impact of the fines on local authorities arising from the Community Care (Delayed Discharges etc) Bill. [96994]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the response given to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) on 5 December 2002, Official Report, column 963W. An announcement on this will be made shortly.

Contractor Fraud

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for health pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 120W, on contractor fraud, how much money has been recovered in each of the last three years. [95092]

Mr. Lammy: The figures are shown in the table.

Year	Value of Recovery (£)
1999–2000	158,232
2000–2001	3,197,377
2001–2002	2,228,603

Erythropoietin

Mr. Havard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the use of erythropoietin will be referred to NICE for consideration. [95575]

Ms Blears: Erythropoietin for chemotherapy induced anaemia is being considered as part of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence's ninth wave work programme, the contents of which will be announced later this year.

Ethics Committee Administrators

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local research ethics committee administrators resigned between (a) 1 April 2001 and 31 March 2002, and (b) 1 April and 30 November 2002. [94776]

Mr. Lammy: Administrators for local research ethics committees are employed locally, and personnel records are not held centrally. From 1 October 2002, however, the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees has monitored the resignation, appointment and training of administrators.

Ethics Committees Authority

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) membership and (b) purpose of the UK Ethics Committees Authority are; and if he will make a statement. [94747]

Mr. Lammy: There is at present no United Kingdom ethics committee authority. Directive 2001/20/EC required United Kingdom-wide opinions on the ethics of proposals for clinical trials involving medicinal products for human use from May 2004. After consultation in 2003, draft regulations implementing Directive 2001/20/EC will be laid before Parliament.

Food Supplements

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the implications for (a) specialist manufacturers, (b) specialist retailers and (c) consumer choice of the requirement to remove from the market the nutrients and nutrient sources which are not listed as acceptable for such use under the schedules to the proposed Food Supplements (England) Regulations 2003. [96119]

Ms Blears: The regulations will not require the immediate removal from the market of food supplements containing nutrients and nutrient sources excluded from the lists in Schedules 2 and 3, which have been drawn directly from Annexes I and II in the directive. Therefore, in the short-term there is likely to be little, if any, impact upon specialist manufacturers, specialist retailers or consumer choice.

The longer-term impact will depend upon progress in adding vitamin and minerals and their sources to the lists of permitted nutrients in the directive.

In implementing the directive, the Government are able, for a limited period of time, to allow continued use of substances not on the permitted lists, and—with very few exceptions—they intend to do so.

Food Supplements/Herbal Remedies

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the food supplements and herbal remedies industry; and when he next plans to do so. [96118]

Ms Blears: My noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State (the Lord Hunt of Kings Heath) and I last met formally with representatives of the food supplements industry in July 2002 to discuss concerns over the possible impact of the EU food supplements directive on the UK industry. At present, Ministers have no plans for further meetings about this, but are always willing to meet stakeholders when circumstances have changed or there are new issues to be raised.

My noble Friend and I have held discussions with a wide range of stakeholders in the herbal sector on a number of occasions over the last year to discuss the proposed directive on traditional herbal medicinal products. Latterly, my noble Friend attended a meeting of stakeholders at the Medicines Control Agency on 10 October 2002. He met a number of trade associations on 21 November 2002 and representatives of Consumers for Health Choice, Holland and Barrett and general nutrition centres on 28 November 2002. He also attended a Consumers for Health Choice Parliamentary Reception on 4 December 2002.

My noble Friend plans to meet herbal interest groups again when the European Commission has published updated proposals for the directive. A date for this meeting has not yet been fixed.

Fraud and Theft

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been lost by his Department and its agencies and non-departmental public bodies through (a) fraud and (b) theft for each year since 1996–97. [92453]

Mr. Lammy: The figures are shown in the table.

Amounts lost through fraud and theft

	Department	Agencies	Non-departmental public bodies
1996–97	45,360.89	6,561.00	57,936.87
1997–98	61,415.26	1,461.00	10,458.00
1998–99	66,897.29	Nil	6,903.00
1999–00	48,148.81	3,493.00	3,493.00
2000–01	56,831.99	Nil	6,582.00
2001–02	34,862.67	17,060.51	12,131.00

The Department has a counter fraud service, staffed by professionally trained and accredited counter fraud specialists.

Kava-kava

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comparative risk assessment he has conducted of kava-kava. [91948]

Ms Blears: Decision making in medicines regulation is based on the comparative evaluation of the risks and the benefits of individual products. All available data in relation to the risk of hepatotoxicity associated with kava-kava was carefully considered, taking into account the evidence of benefits of treatment.

The risk assessment for kava-kava was considered by the Committee on Safety of Medicine (CSM), an expert subgroup of the CSM, which included independent experts in herbal medicine, clinical pharmacology and liver disease and the Medicines Commission. In total these committees have considered the safety of kava-kava in depth on five separate o ccasions since December 2001.

The CSM and the Medicines Commission considered a comparative assessment of the risks of kava-kava and benzodiazepines such as bromazepam, oxazepam and diazepam. Following consideration of all available data, these advisory committees considered the level of risk of hepatotoxicity associated with kava-kava to be unacceptable.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether massage oils containing extract of kava-kava plant applied to the scalp for relief of stress will be exempt from the terms of the Medicines for Human Use (Kava-Kava) Prohibition Order 2002. [96061]

Ms Blears: Massage oils are not normally regarded as medicinal products by the Medicines Control Agency, but this depends on their ingredients and the claims made for them. However, medicinal products for external use are excluded from the scope of the Medicines for Human Use (Kava-Kava) Prohibition Order 2002. Accordingly, the Order does not cover massage oils containing kava-kava which are medicinal products.

Modernisation Agency

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budget of the Modernisation Agency is in (a) 2002–03 and (b) subsequent years which have been allocated. [95400]

Mr. Lammy: The delegated revenue budget for the Modernisation Agency for 2002–03 is £106.5 million.

Budgets for subsequent years have not yet been finalised. However, it is anticipated that additional resources will be made available during the three year period from 2003–04 to 2005–06 in order to fund specific initiatives to be taken forward by the Modernisation Agency.

National Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many consultations he has received in response to the National Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy. [96075]

Ms Blears: The Cabinet Office strategy unit and the Department of Health conducted a joint consultation exercise on the national alcohol harm reduction strategy. This consultation exercise ran from 15 October 2002 to 15 January 2003. 319 responses were received.

NHS Operations

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of operations carried out by NHS hospital trusts in England in the last year which have resulted in retained instruments left inside the patients. [96093]

Ms Blears: At the present time, we do not know how many national health service patients are affected by this type of medical error.

However, retained instruments and in particular swabs, are a recognised patient safety issue, both nationally and internationally.

The Government have established the national patient safety agency to improve the safety of NHS patient care by promoting an open and fair culture and by introducing a national reporting and learning system for adverse events. It is planned for the system to be rolled out across the NHS from summer 2003. The reporting and learning system will, in time, enable us to understand the nature and extent of adverse events in the NHS, including material retained within patients, and take action to prevent them from being repeated.

NHS Productivity Growth

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department routinely uses output data from the NHS to estimate overall trends in NHS productivity growth. [96689]

Mr. Milburn: We routinely compare increases in cost-weighted activity with increases in expenditure. However this does not accurately measure National Health Service productivity since it fails to capture activity undertaken in primary care or improvements in quality.

NHS Staff (Assaults)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 28 January 2003, Official Report, column 820W, on NHS staff assaults, what the levels of sickness absence resulting from work-related injuries or violence at work were in each hospital trust in West Sussex in the last three months. [96083]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

NHS Staff (Disease Testing)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1)whether he proposes to extend testing for all new NHS staff for diseases other than HIV and hepatitis; [96068]

(2) when he proposes to introduce HIV and hepatitis tests for all new NHS staff. [96067]

Ms Blears: Our recent draft guidance published for consultation, "Health clearance for serious communicable diseases: new health care workers", proposes that new health care workers whose jobs or training will involve exposure prone procedures will have to test negative for HIV, hepatitis B and hepatitis C before taking up their posts. Such procedures occur mainly in surgery, obstetrics and gynaecology, dentistry and midwifery, where there is a risk that injury to the health care worker could expose a patient to their blood.

The draft guidance does not require HIV and hepatitis tests for all new national health service staff because the clinical procedures carried out by the majority of health care workers carry no risk of transmission of these viruses, provided routine infection control measures are observed. New health care workers who will not carry out exposure prone procedures will be offered testing for HIV and hepatitis C. Testing for hepatitis B will be carried out if necessary in the context of checking response to immunisation.

Consultation is due to end on 30 April 2003. The final version of the guidance is due to be published in the second half of 2003, taking account of the comments received, with an estimated four months' lead time for implementation.

New health care workers already have health checks for tuberculosis and are offered immunisation, if necessary. We keep policy on health checks for other infectious diseases under on-going review.

Prescribing Costs

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement on costs of prescribing. [96682]

Mr. Lammy: The National Health Service is continuing to expand investment in primary care prescribing to reflect the Government's priorities in areas such as coronary heart disease. Expenditure for England this year is forecast to be around £6.35 billion, an increase of around 11.5 per cent. over the previous year.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92237]

Mr. Lammy: The table shows the expenditure on major campaign publicity and advertising commissioned by the Department of Health's Communications Directorate for the financial years 1995–96 to 2002–03.

£ million

Financial year	Publicity expenditure (excluding advertising)	Advertising expenditure
1995–96	13.48	2.08
1996–97	12.63	2.50
1997–98	4.582	2.04
1998–99	14.43	8.53
1999–2000	20.797	15.166
2000–01	25.32	20.80
2001–02	16.823	20.405
2002–03 (to date)	18.04	22.916

Publicity and advertising expenditure for the Department's agencies and non-departmental public bodies can be provided only at disproportionate cost. Expenditure for publicity other than that associated with campaigns can also be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Prior to 1999–2000 publicity and advertising on smoking was undertaken by the Health Education Authority (HEA). £54.53 million has been spent to date by the Department.

There have been a number of new campaigns since 1999–2000. These include:

Sexual Health (2001–02 to date);

Immunisation (2001–02 to date);

Social Worker Recruitment (2001–02 to date);

Tuberculosis awareness (2001–02 to date);

Walk-in Centres (2000–01 to date);

Mind Out for Mental Health (2001–02 to date).

2001–02 and 2002–03 include Health Promotion England Publicity and Advertising (HPE), which became part of the Department in 2001.

Research Ethics Committees

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees will make funds available to local research ethics committees for the training of their members. [94743]

Ms Blears: A letter from the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees, dated 26 September 2002, invited local research ethics committees to report their running costs for reimbursement. Within these costs, local research ethics committees were invited to identify training costs for both members and administrators.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who the members are of the independent group drawn from local research ethics committees, multi-centre research ethics committees, health authorities, research subjects, wider lay interests and the research community evaluating the MREC system; how often they have met; what the results were of their deliberations; and if he will make a statement. [94744]

Mr. Lammy: The Centre of Medical Law and Ethics at King's College London was commissioned to conduct an evaluation of the multi-centre research ethics committee system. The evaluation was undertaken via a customer based questionnaire survey. Questionnaires were issued to all applicants to multi-centre research ethics committees during the period 1 July 1997 to 30 June 1998. Questionnaires were issued to principal researchers, sponsor companies, local researchers and local research ethics committees processing locality assessments. The evaluation was based on 1,303 completed questionnaires and on information from the multi-centre research ethics committees' annual reports.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how and where the posts of director of corporate affairs and director of operations of the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees were advertised; and how many applications were received for each post. [94746]

Mr. Lammy: The posts of director of corporate affairs and director of operations at the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC) were advertised in the Health Services Journal and in the September 2002 edition of the research ethics committee administrators bulletin, issued by COREC. There were three applications for each of the posts.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees became responsible for research ethics committees in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) the United Kingdom. [94748]

Mr. Lammy: The Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC) is not responsible for research ethics committees in England, Wales or the United Kingdom. Strategic health authorities (StHAs) have the responsibility that health authorities formerly had for research ethics committees in England.

In preparation for the implementation of Directive 2001/20/EC, my noble Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Lord Hunt), wrote to research ethics committee chairmen on 7 August 2002 to inform them that he had decided that COREC would oversee the operation of research ethics committees in England and would establish a system of direct support for them, working closely with StHAs.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment was made of the need for regional offices for research ethics committees; what consultations were held; and what his estimate is of the annual costs of running these offices. [94749]

Mr. Lammy: The Department agreed to proposals to establish offices of research ethics committees, following an assessment by the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC). The main consideration was the support that the national health service and local research ethics committees are expected to require in complying with regulations implementing Directive 2001/20/EC.

COREC engaged in extensive informal consultation on proposals to establish offices of research ethics committees during meetings held in 2002. The plans were described in management information sheet number 1, issued by COREC in May 2002. This was sent to identified strategic health authority officers, research and development directors and chairmen of research ethics committees. The costs of running the offices of research ethics committees in England are estimated to be £900,000 a year.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the ability of local research ethics committees to improve their performance as set out in the recommendations of the pharmaceutical industry competitiveness task force; and what funding they have received to deliver this. [94750]

Mr. Lammy: The Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC) continues to advise the Department on the ability of the research ethics system to meet the standards set out in the guidance for research ethics committees that the Department promised to uphold in its response to the pharmaceutical industry competitiveness task force (PICTF) report.

PICTF indicator number 22 shows that local research ethics committees are meeting the 60-day target for ethical consideration of protocols for clinical trials of medicines. Data on PICTF indicators can be found on the Department's website at: www.doh.gov.uk/pictf

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local research ethics committees received (a) all or (b) part of their funding from health authorities prior to 1 April 2002; how many local research ethics committees have received funding from strategic health authorities since 1 April 2002; how many local research ethics committees have received funding from the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees since 1 April 2002; and what the total value of funding was. [94751]

Ms Blears: District health authorities became responsible for establishing local research ethics committees in 1991. District health authorities from then and health authorities from 1996 funded all local research ethics committees up to 30 September 2002, but information on the funding provided during this period is not held centrally.

From 1 October 2002, the Department, through the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC) made central provision to reimburse the costs of local research ethics committees on behalf of strategic health authorities. COREC is working with all local research ethics committees to establish their budgets, some of which remain to be finalised. I shall write to the hon. Member with the details when they are available.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the reasons are for the delay in the issuing of a common application form for researchers to use when applying to a research ethics committee; and by how long it has been delayed. [94772]

Mr. Lammy: The Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC) originally planned to pilot a common application form for research ethics committees from October 2002. However, the European Commission have not finalised guidance on the minimum requirements for an application form for research ethics committees to comply with the provision of Directive EC2001/20/EC. Piloting with multi-centre research ethics committees will begin in February 2003.

The common application form is planned to be available on the COREC website: www.corec.org.uk on 14 February 2003. The form will be for optional use by local research ethics committees from April 2003, and all research ethics committees will be required to use the form from October 2003.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment COREC made of commercially available software options designed to provide administrative support to research ethics committees; and what the cost was in (a) time and (b) equipment of the software devised by his Department to provide administrative support to the research ethics committees. [94773]

Mr. Lammy: The Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC) has begun work to develop a common information technology system to support the administration of research ethics committees. COREC has started a scoping exercise on their current information technology use and requirements. Options, including the use of commercially available software, to meet the needs identified, will be considered in May 2003.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many letters were received from local research ethics committees by the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees from (a) 1 January to 31 December 2001, (b) 1 January to 30 September 2002 and (c) 1 October to 31 October; how many of those letters were acknowledged within one month; and how many of those letters have neither been acknowledged nor received a reply. [94777]

Mr. Lammy: The Central Office for Research Ethics Committees (COREC) has now put in place a system for logging correspondence. However, to provide the historical data requested, individual files held at COREC need to be accessed. I shall write to the hon. Member with the information when this has been collated.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent the training strategy for research ethics committee members developed by COREC matches that recommended in the report on the training needs of research ethics committee members commissioned by his Department. [94778]

Mr. Lammy: The training strategy for research ethics committee members was developed by the Central Office of Research Ethics Committees following a review of past work; following consultation with members of multi-centre and local research ethics committees, users and current providers of training; and taking into consideration the report on training needs commissioned by the Department. The training strategy was publicised at meetings throughout 2002, especially at Birmingham on 23 October 2002.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether COREC followed the guidelines for making public appointments when appointing (a) an adviser on training research ethics committees and (b) an adviser on accreditation of research ethics committees; and what relevant skills and experience each appointed adviser to COREC has. [94856]

Mr. Lammy: The two positions in question are not public appointments. The appointments were made by the Central Office for Research Ethics Committees with the knowledge of the Department taking into account the expertise and experience that those appointed offered.

The training adviser is Dr Hugh Davies. He is a former local research ethics committee and multi-centre research ethics committee chairman, and is a consultant paediatrician with a particular interest in professional education. He has a master's degree in higher and professional training and is a member of the institute of learning and teaching.

Dr. John Lamberty is the chairman of the working group on the accreditation of research ethics committees. He is a consultant anaesthetist. He is a former member of a multi-centre research ethics committee, former chairman of a local research ethics committee, current chairman of a multi-centre research ethics committee and current vice-chairman of the association of research ethics committees. He was a member of the steering groups that established multi-centre research ethics committees and the association of research ethics committees.

Theft/Fraud

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in 2002. [89901]

Mr. Lammy: The figures are shown in the table.

Department £	Agencies £	Non-departmental public bodies £
34,862,67	17,060.51	12,131.00

The Department has a counter fraud service staffed by professionally trained and accredited counter fraud specialists.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Broadcasting

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to her answer of 3 December 2002, Official Report, column 780W, on broadcasting, if she will list the targets set for BBC commercial income, and the Corporation's progress against those targets to date. [88878]

Dr. Howells: As part of the licence fee settlement, announced in February 2000, the BBC was expected to raise an additional £490 million through efficiency savings and increased income. The BBC expects to have generated £75 million in extra cash from its commercial ventures by the end of this financial year.

Capita

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to her answer of 9 January 2003, Official Report, column 51W, on Capita, if she will set out his reasons for having no further dealings with Capita since February 2002. [97331]

Dr. Howells: The DCMS have used Capita as one of five companies within a framework agreement when a need for their services have arisen. Since February 2002 there have been contracts for which the other framework agreement suppliers have been chosen as more suitable. At some point in the future the services offered by Capita could be chosen over the other companies and they will then be offered work by the Department.

Digital Television (Rural Areas)

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what reports she has (a) commissioned and (b) examined into the barriers the public in rural areas face in the take-up of digital television. [97230]

Dr. Howells: No such reports have been commissioned as yet. But the Digital Television Action Plan addresses the need to ensure the accessibility and affordability of digital television for consumers, including those in rural areas. The Action Plan, together with details of the work undertaken to date, are available on the website: www.digitaltelevision.gov.uk.

Ethnic Minority Cultural Events

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what funding (a) her Department and (b) its agencies provide to support ethnic minority cultural events. [96910]

Mr. Caborn: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hyde Park (Public Meetings)

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what discussions she has had with the (a) Metropolitan police, (b) Royal Parks police, (c) Stop the War Coalition and (d) the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament concerning the peace rally to be held on 15 February; and if she will make a statement; [95217]

(2) how many times, and for which events, in each of the last five years the use of Hyde Park for public meetings has been refused; [95219]

(3) how many public meetings have been held in Hyde Park in each month in each of the last five years. [95218]

Tessa Jowell: The Chief Executive of the Royal Parks is responsible for agreeing to rallies and assemblies in Hyde Park. His officials, including members of the Royal Parks Constabulary, met representatives from the Stop the War Coalition and the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament on 8 January to discuss the request to hold a rally on 15 February. The Royal Parks and the Royal Parks Constabulary discussed the matter with representatives of Westminster City Council on 23 January and held a subsequent meeting with the Metropolitan police on 28 January. This last meeting was also attended by Westminster City Council, the Greater London Authority and the London Ambulance Service. A further meeting was held with the Metropolitan police, CND and the Stop the War Coalition on 3 February. I also received written correspondence on this matter from the Metropolitan police on 3 February.

The number of public meetings held in Hyde Park in each month in each of the last five years is set out in the following table:

Number of public meetings held in Hyde Park per month since 1998

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
January	1	2	0	0	0
February	2	2	1	0	1
March	3	0	0	1	2
April	0	4	0	0	1
May	2	0	0	2	1
June	2	3	0	5	3
July	1	4	2	0	2
August	0	2	1	1	0
September	1	1	2	3	2
October	3	2	2	0	0
November	1	0	2	0	0
December	0	1	1	0	2

The Royal Parks only turn down permission for rallies or assemblies either because the ground is unsuitable for the numbers involved or because they would clash with another event. In the latter case an alternative date is always offered and usually agreed. The Royal Parks does not hold records of requests turned down in previous years, but the following is a list of those turned down in 2002 and the reasons why:

The National Union of Students Rally on 4 December, the National Union of Teachers Rally on 26 November and the Stansted [Anti-] Expansion rally on 23 November were turned down because the ground was unsuitable and winter ground reinstatement work was in progress;

In November 2002 a request from the Countryside Alliance to congregate in the Park was turned down because it clashed with another event, but it was agreed that the march could 'disperse' into the Park.

A request to hold the 'Hizb ut-Tahrir' assembly on 20 July was turned down because a Route of Kings concert was scheduled for that day;

A request from the Jesus Fellowship Church to hold an assembly on 29 June was turned down because it would have clashed with a large scale concert scheduled for the same day;

A request from the British Equestrian Society to hold a demonstration on 3 June was turned down because it clashed with Jubilee events;

A request from the Grand Orange Lodge of England to hold a rally on 21 April (HM the Queen's birthday) was turned down because management and police resources were at full capacity facilitating Trooping the Colour.

Ministerial Meetings (Scottish Land Fund)

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with the Scottish Executive to determine the demands for future funding from the Scottish Land Fund after the passing of the Land Reform Act by the Scottish Parliament. [95508]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is corresponding with Scottish Ministers about the needs of the Scottish Land Fund. In addition I recently met my hon. Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North and representatives from the New Opportunities Fund and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to discuss the Scottish Land Fund.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Hansard

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what the cost was of reprinting the daily Hansard of 4 February. [96628]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: Under the terms of the printing contract with The Stationery Office (TSO), the cost of reprinting and reissuing the daily Hansard of 3 February was borne by TSO. No additional expense will fall on the House of Commons.

CABINET OFFICE

Ministerial Cars

Norman Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many Ministers are entitled to the allocation of a car; and how many Ministers in each year from 1997 have chosen not to avail themselves of one. [89073]

Mr. Alexander [pursuant to his answer, 8 January 2003, Official Report, c. 216W]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member. A copy of his revised letter has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Airport Police

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions and to what extent the RUC and PSNI has trained and supervised constables of the Northern Ireland Airport Police in accordance with the undertaking given by the Government on 14 February 1994, Official Report, column 667; and how many officers have been trained in each case. [94465]

Jane Kennedy: The Training Officer of the then RUC reviewed training requirements of the Northern Ireland Airport Police and appropriate training has been carried out by PSNI for each new in-take of Airport Police Officers. Effectively, this means that Airport Police Constables are trained alongside PSNI Constables and Airport Auxiliary Constables are trained alongside PSNI part-time Constables.

In addition, the PSNI has provided the Airport Police with training in Police and Criminal Evidence (PACE), use of weapons and Human Rights legislation.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what joint consideration the Home Office, the Department for Transport and the Northern Ireland Office have given to the contents of Sir John Wheeler's Report into Policing at UK Airports 2002, with particular reference to policing at (a) Belfast International, (b) Belfast City and (c) Derry-Eglington airports; and if he will make a statement. [94453]

Jane Kennedy: Sir John Wheeler reviewed Aviation Security at the behest of the Home Secretary. Whilst the NIO was consulted during the fact finding process, it is a matter for the Home Office and the Department for Transport to take forward a detailed analysis of the recommendations in Sir John's report.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which occasions the RUC and PSNI have been consulted by the management of the Belfast International Airport about reductions in policing levels at the airport, since the undertakings given by the Government on 14 February 1994, Official Report, column 691, that such prior consultation would take place; and if he will make a statement. [94464]

Jane Kennedy: Security arrangements at Belfast International Airport are kept under continual review. Officers from PSNI meet regularly with the Airport Authorities to discuss proposed changes in security measures.

In addition, the PSNI, both from Headquarters and the local District Command Unit in Antrim, are represented at meetings of the Belfast International Airport Security Committee (chaired by the Airport Authority) and also the Belfast International Airport Security Co-ordinating Committee meeting (chaired by NIO).

Airport Security

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the last occasion was on which the RUC and PSNI formally agreed the level of security at the Belfast international airport, in accordance with the undertakings given to Parliament by the Government on 14 February 1994, Official Report, column 692; and if he will make a statement. [94455]

Jane Kennedy: Proposed changes to the level of security at Belfast international airport were last discussed at the meeting of the Security Co-ordinating Committee on 30 January 2003. While it would be inappropriate to go into the details, I can advise that the committee, which includes officers from PSNI, considered the merits of the changes and endorsed what was being proposed.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has made the owners of Belfast International Airport aware of their responsibility under the original sales prospectus to meet appropriate security charges determined by and after regular surveys made by the RUC and PSNI, as stated by the Government on 31 January 1994, Official Report (HL), column 165; and if he will make a statement. [94502]

Jane Kennedy: The Airport Authority is responsible for, and continues to fulfil, all its obligations in terms of physical and technical security measures at Belfast International Airport. Security at the Airport is taken very seriously and officers from PSNI meet regularly with the Airport Authority to ensure that appropriate security levels are maintained.

Airports

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent and on which occasions, since the enactment of the Airports (Northern Ireland) Order 1994, the RUC and PSNI has monitored the performance of the Airport constabulary, in accordance with the undertaking given to parliament by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 14 February 1994, Official Report, column 667; and if he will make a statement. [94449]

Jane Kennedy: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to question reference 94464.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on which dates since the enactment of the Airports (Northern Ireland) Order 1994 the Northern Ireland Airport Police has been subject to an annual inspection. [94451]

Jane Kennedy: There has been no formal inspection of the Northern Ireland Airport Police since the enactment of the Airports (Northern Ireland) Order 1994 per se, however, individual and specific service levels are regularly monitored as part of the wider PSNI security reviews, the most recent of which was during week commencing 27 January 2003.

Belfast Airport (Policing)

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much per annum the PSNI charges Belfast City Airport for the cost of policing; and if he will make a statement. [94456]

Jane Kennedy: The PSNI do not levy a charge on Belfast City Airport for the current policing required at that location. The PSNI respond to reports of criminal activity at this location, as they would at every other location throughout Northern Ireland. The annual cost of policing in Northern Ireland is met from within the Police Grant.

Belfast City Airport

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions in the past six months (a) customs officials, (b) airport management and (c) other airport officials have requested attendance and help from PSNI which was not immediately available within the curtilage of the Belfast city airport; and if he will make a statement. [94448]

Jane Kennedy: All the incidents were dealt with initially by Special Branch Portal Unit from within the airport, assisted where necessary by dedicated sector police or a response unit from Strandtown PSNI station.

There have been 43 reported incidents at Belfast city airport since June 2002. Thirty-five of these were luggage, lost or stolen in transit. The remainder were:

one arrest for drugs with customs and excise;

two persons arrests on warrant;

one alleged assault in flight;

three disruptive passengers; and one drunk person.

The normal patrol pattern is for sector police motor cyclists to pay attention to the airport. However, at busy or times of identified or perceived threat, a patrol is dedicated to the area using the airport support 4 x 4 patrol vehicle.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, prior to the sale of the Belfast city airport, he will arrange for the PSNI to review (a) policing requirements and (b) financial charges to the operators in order that this may be taken into account by prospective purchasers. [94457]

Jane Kennedy: The PSNI carried out a review of policing requirements at Belfast city airport during the latter months of last year. Management of financial charges pertaining to the administration of the airport, including security arrangements, are matters for the Airport Authority.

Belfast International Airport

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what safeguards and strict monitoring arrangements the Government put in place in order to ensure that the commercial interests of the management of the Belfast International Airport do not undermine the operational independence and professionalism of the police force or the security of the airport as promised on 31 January 1994, Official Report, (HL) column 1166. [94509]

Jane Kennedy: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today to question reference 94464. These mechanisms ensure that policing arrangements are not compromised by commercial interests, though the Airport Authority have always, and continue to act in a very responsible manner.

Security Committees

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the name of the security committee is, referred to on 14 February 1994, Official Report, column 692, by the Under-Secretary of State; what its constitution is; how frequently it has met in each year since the enactment of the Airports (Northern Ireland) Order 1994; and if he will make a statement. [94454]

Jane Kennedy: The Belfast International Airport Security Co-ordinating Committee is made up of representatives from the Northern Ireland Office, the Department for Regional Development, Department for Transport, PSNI, MOD Headquarters (NI), RAF Aldergrove and Airport Authority. The Committee has met with the following frequency:

	Frequency
1995	2
1996	2
1997	2
1998	1
1999	2
2000	3
2001	2
2002	1

WORK AND PENSIONS

Advertising Expenditure

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92253]

Mr. McCartney: The Department for work and Pensions was formed in June 2001. Since that time, and up until March 2002, around £28,238,773 has been spent on publicity activity educate people or alert them to their rights and responsibilities.

A total publicity spend of around £14,059,468 is estimated for the 2002/03 financial year.

Due to the integrated, multi-media nature of DWP marketing activity, advertising costs are not recorded separately and could only be supplied at disproportionate cost.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the implementation of the new CSA IT system. [92090]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral statement I made on 27 January 2003, Official Report, columns 567–68.

Having checked the Official Report, I have noticed that during the exchange that followed my statement, my answer pointing to the compliance rate for self-employed non-resident parents of 34 per cent. should have been non-compliance at 34 per cent. This reflects the fact that at November 2002 34 per cent. paid nothing. The figure for those non-resident parents who are fully and partially compliant for this group is at 66 per cent., but this is still significantly below the figure for all cases.

Deferred Annuities

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the current providers of deferred annuities, as referred to in paragraph 81, page 65 of the Green Paper Simplicity, security and choice; and if he will make a statement on the bad value of deferred annuities. [95276]

Mr. McCartney: The current providers of deferred annuities are 'Legal and General' and Prudential. In the Green Paper, "Simplicity, security and choice—Working and saving for retirement" (Cm 5677), we state our interest in considering the establishment central fund into which members could choose to pay the funds that they receive on wind-up. The fund could then—acting as a whole—negotiate the purchase of deferred annuities with providers. The Green Paper sets out the market context in which such a central fund would operate. The consultation period on the Green Paper ends on 28 March 2003.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the running costs of (a) the Department and (b) each of its sponsored agencies were in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available. [90703]

Mr. McCartney: The figures are available in:

Appropriation Accounts 1997–98 Class XII Department of Social Security Vote 3 Account.

Appropriation Accounts 2000–01 Class XII Department of Social Security Vote 3 Account.

These are available in the Library.

E-Mail Addresses

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions by what e-mail address members of the public may contact (a) him and (b) each of the Ministers in his Department; and for each e-mail address if he will state (i) the date it became active and (ii) the number of e-mails received in each month since activation. [97438]

Maria Eagle: Ministers can be contacted at ministers@dwp.gsi.gov.uk. The Department was formed on 8 June 2001 and the e-mail address was activated shortly afterwards. Separate records are not kept of the number of e-mail messages received.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the latest figures for housing benefit processing times are, broken down by local authority. [88209]

Malcolm Wicks: Under Best Value, we have set a range of performance indicators for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit for English local authorities, three of which are concerned with processing times. There are similar indicators for local authorities inWales and Scotland.

The latest audited best value performance information for English local authorities is for 2001–02 and was published on 12 December on the Best Value Performance Indicators website at http://www.bvpi.gov.uk/home.asp. A copy is available in the Library.

The most recent corresponding data for local authorities in Wales are for 2000/01. These are published on the Audit Commission website at http://ww2.Audit-Commission.gov.uk/pis/pi_data_01.shtml. A copy of the relevant extract from this site has been placed in the Library. The Local Government Data Unit for Wales, the Audit Commission in Wales and the Welsh Assembly Government intend to jointly publish performance information for 2001/02 by the end of the current financial year.

The most recent corresponding data for local authorities in Scotland are also for 2000–01 and are in the Accounts Commission publication "Performance Indicators 2000/2001: Benefits, Finance and Corporate Issues", a copy of which is in the Library. Audit Scotland intends to publish performance information for 2001/02 on behalf of the Accounts Commission in mid January 2003.

The Department collects quarterly un-audited performance information from local authorities across Great Britain. We published this information on the Department's website at www.dwp.qsi.gov.uk/asd/otherstats.html on 29 January 2003. Copies are available in the Library.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many times since 2001 he has taken flights on departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied him on each trip. [95392]

Mr. McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Pension Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assumptions underlie the calculation that pensioners on £150 a week will gain £1,100 a year from the pension credit, as set out on 15 January 2002, Official Report, column 629W. [95234]

Mr. McCartney: The assumptions underlying this calculation are that it is a pensioner couple receiving full basic state pension, all additional income qualifies for the savings credit and they are not currently entitled to the minimum income guarantee.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions [pursuant to his answer 18 December 2002, Official Report, column 859], whether the data on the number of pension schemes that have completed winding-up and the members of those schemes in the financial years 2000–01 and 2001–02 is likely to be revised. [91585]

Mr. McCartney: As explained in the answer to the previous parliamentary question, the data used was derived from information collected by the Pension Schemes Registry (PSR), which is not designed or intended to provide a comprehensive or continuous statistical record of the number of schemes which wind-up. The PSR registers schemes for tracing purposes and collects the levy from pension schemes, including those in the process of winding-up. New scheme data is being reported to the PSR on a continuous basis. Therefore, the figures aresubject to continuous revision. The figures in the previous parliamentary question showing the number of schemes commencing and in the process of winding up and the number of members of those schemes shown were correct in terms of the information available to the PSR. As new information becomes available on an on-going basis, the figures change. That is because the figures are a snapshot. Since the previous parliamentary question, in the course of itspursuance of unpaid levy liabilities, the PSR has identified further schemeswhich had commenced wind up in previous years and were still in the wind upprocess. These schemes are added to the figures as they are identified. At the same time, the PSR will sometimes identify that some schemes had completedwind up in previous years. These schemes are removed from the columnshowing schemes still in the process of winding up and are added to thecolumn showing completed wind ups. Again, this occurs on an on-going basisas the PSR identifies the facts.

However, work to produce the latest available figures has indicated factualerrors in the presentation of the figures for the earlier parliamentary question of 18 December 2002 showing the number of completed wind ups and thenumbers of members of those schemes. These errors relate to technicalaspects of the PSR's database, but the most significant effect was to overstatethe numbers of members in schemes that had completed wind up.

The correct up-to-date figures are as follows:

Year	Number of schemes notifying PSR that they are commencing wind up and are still in the process	Number of members in schemes notifying PSR that they are commencing wind up and still in the process
1/4/1997–31/3/1998	94	9,485
1/4/1998–31/3/1999	154	5,732
1/4/1999–31/3/2000	4,623	107,397
1/4/2000—31/3/2001	1,771	76,156
1/4/2001—31/3/2002	2,263	77,642

Year	Number of schemes that completed winding up	Number of members in schemes that completed winding up
1/4/1997–31/3/1998	24,974	541,298
1/4/1998–31/3/1999	7,388	165,572
1/4/1999–31/3/2000	8,151	343,365
1/4/2000 31/3/2001	6,047	158,118
1/4/2001 31/3/2002	4,388	230,406

I regret that the figures provided previously in relation to schemes which had completed wind up were not fully accurate. The PSR has now put in place procedures to prevent a recurrence.

Notes:

The reason the figures for completed wind ups in 1997/98 are so much larger than for other years is that from 1997, the rules governing which schemes had a levy liability were changed—all schemes with two or more members became liable whereas previously, only schemes with two or more active members were liable. So, in 1997, the PSR issued levy requests to a large number of schemes, only to discover that a number of them had already wound up. All these schemes were recorded as having completed wind up in 1997/98 even if, in fact, they had wound up earlier. Therefore, we know these figures are inflated, but not by how much. As explained, that is because the figures were not collected for the purpose of recording the numbers of scheme wind ups.

Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people are estimated to be deferring claiming their state pension, broken down by (a) men and (b) women; and how many of each category are working. [96180]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is shown in the following table.

Number of people deferring state pension

	Great Britain
Male	8,000
Female	28,000
Total	35,000

Notes:

1. Numbers do not sum to totals due to rounding.
2. Numbers rounded to nearest 1,000.
3. Northern Ireland and Channel Island cases are not included in the table.
4. Due to data limitations a number of assumptions were required to produce these numbers. Therefore the numbers shown above should be considered to be approximate.

Pensions Credit

Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has for additional ways of publicising the pensions credit. [94873]

Mr. McCartney: In addition to writing to everyone 60 and over about Pension Credit, we are planning a substantial marketing campaign to include TV and press advertising. We are also working closely with partners including pensions organisations on customer communications products.

Portsmouth, South

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people were awarded increments for deferring their state pension in the last year for which data are available, broken down by (a) male and (b) female and (i) United Kingdom resident and (ii) living abroad at the point of award. [96179]

Mr. McCartney: The information in the table shows the number of people who claimed their state pension between 31 March 2001 and 31 March 2002 and received increment.

	Great Britain	Overseas	All
Male	4,000	2,000	5,000
Female	13,000	3,000	16,000
All	16,000	5,000	21,000

Notes:

1. Numbers rounded to nearest 1,000.
2. Numbers may not sum to totals due to rounding.
3. Northern Ireland and Channel Island cases are not included in the table.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many unemployed people in Tamworth are claiming unemployment benefit; and what the change in the number of unemployed since 1997 is. [96531]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. Brian Jenkins, dated 11 February 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question regarding the number of unemployed people in Tamworth who are claiming unemployment benefit and what the change in the number of unemployed since 1997 is. (96531)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) compiles statistics of unemployment from surveys following the international standard International Labour Organisation definition. However the survey sample size is too small to provide estimates for the Tamworth Parliamentary Constituency.

However, the number of people in the Tamworth Parliamentary Constituency claiming the Jobseeker's Allowance benefit fell by 458 from a figure of 1,541 in December 1997 to 1,083 in December 2002.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

A*-G Grades

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils achieved five or more A*-G grades in each year from 1995 to 2001. [97155]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown as follows:

Percentage of 15-year-old pupils achieving five or more A-G grades in all schools in England*

1995–96	44.5
1996–97	45.1
1997–98	46.3
1998–99	47.9
2000–01	50.0

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of pupils achieved one A*-G grade in each year from 1995 to 2001. [97156]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown as follows:

Percentage of 15-year-old pupils achieving one or more A-G grades in all schools in England*

	Percentage
1994–95	91.9
1995–96	92.2
1996–97	92.3
1997–98	93.4
1998–99	94.0
1999–2000	94.4
2000–01	94.6

Area Cost Adjustment

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which counties qualify for the education area cost adjustment; and how much they receive on average in 2002–03 per student in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools. [96506]

Mr. Miliband: The following table sets out, for those authorities who qualify for the area cost adjustment from April 2003, the primary and secondary SSA per pupil for 2002–03.

	SSA (£) per pupil
LEA name	Aged 5–10	Aged 11–15
Bedfordshire	2,660	3,410
Buckinghamshire	2,660	3,410
East Sussex	2,710	3,500
Hampshire	2,580	3,320
Wiltshire[1]	2,510	3,220
Cambridgeshire[1]	2,530	3,230
Cheshire[1]	2,470	3,150
Essex	2,710	3,460

Warwickshire[1]	2,490	3,170
West Sussex	2,640	3,360

[1] Authority qualifying for ACA for the first time from April 2003

Baccalaureat Technique

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the French (a) Baccalauréat Technique and (b) Baccalauréat Général systems. [97535]

Mr. Miliband: We considered a range of qualifications models from overseas, including those from France, in developing the proposals, including further work on a unified qualifications framework for 14 to 19-year-olds, set out in "14–19: Opportunity and Excellence", published on 21 January 2003.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his estimate is of the cost in 2003–04 to the construction equipment hire industry of the imposition of levies to the Construction Industry Training Board. [96307]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The amount of levy payable in 2003 by employers declaring their main activity to be Plant Hire or Repair (including Tool Hire) is forecast to be £3.5 million.

Departmental Expenditure

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on his Department's expenditure plans for 2003–04 and 2004–05. [96659]

Mr. Charles Clarke: My Statement to the House of 19 December, Official Report, column 67WS, sets out my Department's planned expenditure for 2003–04 and 2004–05. Plans for Higher Education expenditure were included in the White Paper, The Future of Higher Education' (Command Number, 5735) published on 22 January.

Deprivation (Funding)

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what criteria he uses to define deprivation for the purposes of the education funding formula; and how they differ from the deprivation criteria used by the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions. [96998]

Mr. Miliband: Deprivation is measured in the new education funding formula through child based measures of poverty: the proportion of children in families on income support or in receipt of working families' tax credit. The other indicators used in the formula for distribution of grant to local authorities are set out in the Local Government finance report 2003–04, a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The formula are designed to measure the relative costs of service delivery, and individual service blocks use the most appropriate measures of need, including deprivation: there is no reason why these should be the same for all service blocks.

English-style Baccalaureat

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how the (a) content and (b) academic standard of his proposed English style Baccalaureate will compare with those of (i) the German Abilus and (ii) the French Baccalaureate. [97332]

Mr. Miliband: Following the publication of "14–19: Opportunity and Excellence" on 21 January this year, one of the key tasks for the 14–19 working group which Mike Tomlinson will chair will be to consider, and make recommendations about, the rationale and potential design of such a qualification.

Finance (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what SSA allocation the City of Leeds received in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03, (c) 2003–04; and what was (i) the LEA spend and (ii) the size of the schools budget in (A) 2001–02 and (B) 2002–03. [96971]

Mr. Miliband: In 2001–02 the City of Leeds' Education SSA was £317.01 million; in 2002–03 it is £311.54 million. In 2003–04 its Education Formula Spending Share is £344.63 million.

The figure for 2003–04 is not fully comparable with the earlier figures. The figure for 2003–04 includes funding transferred into EFS from grant and to take account of the increase in contributions to the Teachers' Pension Scheme. The figures for 2002–03 and 2003–04 do not include Sixth Form funding: responsibility for that was transferred to the Learning and Skills Council in 2002–03.

In 2001–02 the City of Leeds' education budget was £311.54 million and in 2002–03 it was £306.18 million. We cannot split out the schools budget for 2001–02 but in 2002–03 it was £276.20 million.

The information requested on the LEA spend for 2001–02 is not yet available as the Department is in the process of collecting it. I will write to my hon. Friend when the information becomes available. The Department is not due to collect the data for 2002–03 until September 2003.

Government Offices for the Regions

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what responsibilities the Government offices for the regions have relating to education. [96280]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Government offices are responsible for supporting the delivery of the department's educational policies, programmes and initiatives in the regions and ensuring coherence and synergy with other Government policies, programmes and initiatives.

DfES issues Government offices with guidance at the start of the year, and Government offices identify the key issues and priorities in a region and work with partners to ensure resources are targeted appropriately.

During the forthcoming year, GOs will have three core priorities, based around:

Floor targets for schools-with particular emphasis on ensuring that regeneration and renewal work across Government supports the achievement of these targets;

School behaviour and attendance-joining up local and sub-regional stakeholders with the range of cross Government work to support achievement of targets;

Adult skills-with emphasis on regional skills priorities and basic skills, joining up sub-regional and regional stakeholders and resources to ensure delivery of adult skills targets.

Key Stage 4

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the national standard of teaching at Key Stage 4. [97154]

Mr. Miliband: In his annual report for 2001–02, published on 5 February 2003, HM Chief Inspector of Schools, David Bell, reported that inspectors had judged the quality of teaching at Key Stage 4 to be good or better in 79 per cent. of maintained secondary schools and unsatisfactory or poor in 2 per cent. of those schools. He confirmed that the quality of teaching is reflected in rising standards, with more young people completing their compulsory education with a range of good examination results and fewer leaving the system with no qualifications.

Modern Apprenticeship Programmes

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the completion rates were for the modern apprenticeship programmes in each year since their inception. [94314]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There are no published rates for completion of modern apprenticeship frameworks. Figures are, however, routinely available for achievement of the main qualifications of Modern Apprenticeship programmes: full National Vocational Qualification (NVQ) level 2 for Foundation Modern Apprenticeships (FMA), and full NVQ level 3 for Advanced Modern Apprenticeships (AMA).

Ofsted

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funds his Department has allocated to OFSTED in (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06, (i) in cash terms and (ii) on a full resource budgeting basis. [96284]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The following table sets out my allocations to OFSTED.

£ million

	2003–04	2004–05	2005–06
Cash Terms	200	203	212
Resource Budgeting	203	206	215

The Resource Budgeting figures are those I announced in my statement to the house on 19 December, Official Report, column 67WS, and includes both resource and capital provision.

The cash figures exclude the provision made for depreciation, cost of capital and other accrual to cash adjustments, such as changes in Debtors and Creditors.

Primary Schools (Security)

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what security guidelines he issues to local education authorities with regard to primary schools; [96646]

(2) what advice he gives local education authorities about security considerations applying to the locations of primary schools; [96647]

(3) what his policy is on location of primary schools adjacent to (a) prisons, (b) probation centres, (c) magistrates' courts, (d) military bases and (e) drugs and alcohol clinics day centres. [96648]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 10 February 2003]: My Department has issued guidance on school security that includes "School Security: Dealing with Troublemakers" (jointly with the Home Office) and "Improving Security in Schools" and a video, "Can You See What They See?". We have also established a school security website at: www.dfes.gov.uk/schoolsecurity.

Where local education authorities publish proposals to establish a new school, or transfer an existing school to a new site, the final decision is taken at local level by a School Organisation Committee (SOC) or by a Schools Adjudicator if the SOC cannot reach a unanimous decision. The SOC and the Adjudicator must have regard to guidance issued by the Secretary of State when making their decisions. This includes a range of factors they should consider including the overall effect on standards of provision in the area, existence of safe walking, cycling or bus routes and the views of those affected by the proposals.

Public Bodies

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funds his Department has allocated to each public body sponsored by the department in (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06, (i) in cash terms and (ii) on a full resource budgeting basis. [96283]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The amounts allocated to each public body and the consequential cash requirements—voted as grant in aid—are shown in the table.

	2003–04		2004–05		2005–06
	Cash	Resource	Cash	Resource	Cash	Resource (£ million)
Adult Learning Inspectorate	24	24	24	24	24	24
British Educational Communications and Technology Agency[1]	5	6	5	6	6	7
General Teaching Council	1	2	1	1	1	1
Higher Education Funding Council for England	5,411	5,399	5,844	5,833	6,324	6,334

Sector Skills Development Agency	42	42	45	45	48	48
Teacher Training Agency	496	499	523	526	550	553

[1] This excludes any funding BECTA may receive for managing specific projects.
[2] SC resource figures exclude capital costs and depreciation, which have not yet been agreed.
[3] The figure for 2003–04 is an indicative amount notified to the Student Loans Company pending a full allocation for the whole period.
Notes:
1. All figures are rounded to the nearest million.
2. The cash figures exclude the provision made for depreciation, cost of capital and other.
3. Accrual to cash adjustments, such as changes, in Debtors and Creditors.
4. All allocations for 2004–05 and 2005–05 are indicative and subject to receipt of detailed business plans from each public body.

School Buildings

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the value of school buildings in England; and if he will make a statement. [95784]

Mr. Miliband: We estimate the replacement value of schools buildings in England to be around £93 billion at 2003 price levels. This includes for bringing the buildings up to present design standards but excludes the value of land.

School Meals

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average price of a school meal was in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in each local authority area in England and Wales in each academic year since 1997–98. [96665]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills does not collect statistics on the price of school meals in schools in England. The Welsh Assembly is responsible for school meal policy for schools in Wales.

Sector Skills Development Agency

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what criteria he used to judge the relevant expertise of appointments to the board and senior management of the Sector Skills Development Agency; and if he will make a statement. [97256]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: All appointments to the Sector Skills Development Agency Board were made under fair and open competition and required high-level representation from the private sector as well as wider employment and voluntary sector interests. Board appointees were judged against the following criteria:

a successful track record of Board level work, strategy development and implementing change evidence of contribution to employer based initiatives to improve businessproductivity and competitiveness through workforce development evidence of promoting and encouraging diversity in the workforce a personal profile with evidence of being able to represent others, work in partnership and as part of a team evidence of developing creative solutions to sophisticated problems well developed and high effective communication, presentation and negotiating skills.

In addition to the Chief Executive there are four senior management posts which areresponsible for finance, operations, policy and research and marketing. While the selection criteria for each post were different to reflect their diverse technical needs, there were a number of core criteria common to all posts including:

Experience of working at senior management and contributing to the strategic direction of a comparable organisation.

Proven ability to communicate effectively and influence both within an organisation and with external partners and stakeholders.

Proven ability to manage budgets and projects within their area or responsibility in order to meet defined targets within competing priorities.

Proven ability to take decisions decisively and effectively.

The highest standards of probity and integrity.

A strong commitment to promoting equality of opportunity.

Specialist Status Schools

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 783W, on specialist status schools, what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of specialist status on technology colleges. [96767]

Mr. Miliband: The October 2001 Ofsted survey of the programme ("Specialist Schools: An evaluation of progress") looked at the Technology specialism alongside the three other specialisms which were part of the programme in 2000. The survey found that four out of five of the well-established specialist schools covered by the survey were in large measure achieving the aims of the programme and making good use of the advantages it brings. The survey said that for these schools specialist status had often been a catalyst for innovation and helped to sustain or accelerate the momentum of school improvement. The Ofsted survey found no problems specific to Technology Colleges.

The question refers to my answer of 28 January 2003, Official Report, column 783W, which said that since the programme began, 32 Technology Colleges have lost their specialist status in comparison to one school designated in another specialism. The reason for this disparity is that Technology Colleges have been part of the programme for longer and there are many more of them. Technology was the first specialism and was introduced in 1994. Schools come up for re-designation every four years (until 2000 this was every three years).

There are currently schools operating in eight specialisms in the programme—Technology Colleges represent 45 per cent. of these schools. The first Language Colleges began operating in 1995. The first Sports and Arts Colleges began operating in 1997. The first specialist schools designated in Science, Engineering, Business and Enterprise and Mathematics and Computing began operating in September 2002.

Student Appraisal

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent assessment he has made of (a) continuous assessment and (b) examinations as alternative mechanisms for student appraisal. [95941]

Mr. Miliband: The scope for reducing the total burden of external assessment in GCSE and A-level examinations will be considered by our 14–19 Working Group and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority. They will be examining the principles underpinning effective assessment, including the nature and amount of assessment. We expect the Working Group to make an interim report within a year.

Teacher Training

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many initial teacher training places funded by his Department have not been filled by the Teacher Training Agency in each subject for each year since 1997. [96700]

[1] The figures shown for 2001–02 and 2002–03 exclude trainees recruited to the Fast Track. Fast Track are not included as part of the TTA's allocated places.

[2] For subjects where unfilled places are shown as zero, allocated places were exceeded.

[3] Technology includes design and technology, business studies and information technology.

[4] 2001–02 was the first year for recruitment to citizenship, and was included in "other" subjects along with economics and social studies. In 2002–03 places allocated to citizenship were separated out and shown separately.

Teacher Workload

Mr. Simon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will make a statement on the reforms designed to reduce teacher workload, as outlined in the November 2002 Teachers report, with specific reference to measures which will help teachers to keep up with the pace of change occurring in their profession; [96289]

(2) what actions he is taking to ensure there is adequate PPA time for teachers to prepare lessons for their pupils; and how this will balance against teaching time and the time needed to carry out administrative duties. [96290]

Mr. Miliband: On 15 January the Government signed an historic national agreement with school workforce unions and most employers. The agreement sets out a series of measures that will extend support staff roles, tackle teacher workload, and free teachers to spend more of their time on teaching and focus on the individual learning needs of all pupils. Contractual changes for teachers will be made, including:

No requirement routinely to undertake administrative and clerical tasks, including the 24 tasks set out in the agreement, by September 2003;

A limit of 38 hours on the time a teacher should cover lessons, by September 2004;

The equivalent of at least 10 per cent. of their timetabled teaching time to be guaranteed for planning, preparation and assessment (PPA) by September 2005. PPA are core duties and need core time devoted to them. Guaranteeing time during the school day for this is critical to driving up pupil standards.

Schools will be expected to work towards these changes as soon as possible and on later than the dates given above.

Teachers Pay

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average teacher's wage paid in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools is, broken down by LEA. [96492]

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average teacher's salary was for (a) primary and (b) secondary education for each local education authority in England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available. [96801]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

Truancy

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what steps his Department is taking to combat truancy in schools. [96666]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We are committed to the Public Service Agreement target to reduce truancies by 10 per cent. by 2004 compared to 2002, to sustain the new lower level, and improve overall attendance levels thereafter. To achieve this objective, we are investing nearly £470 million over the next three years in a national behaviour and attendance strategy to support schools. This includes behaviour and attendance training and audits available to all secondary schools from September. Through the Behaviour Improvement

Programme further support is currently being targeted at the 700 schools with the greatest challenges, to be extended to a further 1900 schools by 2005. We have a range of further measures to tackle truancy, including the co-ordination of national truancy sweeps; funding for electronic registration systems; the development of guidance for more effective prosecutions in truancy cases in tandem with a fast-track to prosecution model focusing on multi-agency early intervention to address truancy; and a sustained publicity campaign aimed at parents and pupils. In addition, we are proposing to introduce fixed penalty notices and parenting contracts for parents of persistent truants.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the estimated incidence of truancy is in secondary schools broken down by local authority area, in the last year for which figures are available. [96800]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The incidence of truancy is measured by the percentage of half days missed due to unauthorised absence. The latest year for which figures are available is September 2001–May 2002.

Undergraduates

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many and what percentage of undergraduates failed to complete their degree courses in each year since 1997. [88960]

Margaret Hodge: The available information on non-completion rates is contained in "Performance Indicators in Higher Education", published by the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE).

Non-completion rates calculated by HEFCE for full-time students starting first degree courses in UK higher education institutions from 1996–97 onwards are shown in the following table:

1996–97	18
1997–98	17
1998–99	17
1999–2000	17

Note:
The non-completion rate has remained broadly the same at 17–18 per cent. since 1991–92

Figures published in 2002 by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) show that the UK has one of the lowest non-completion rates among OECD countries.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Air Weapons

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many criminal activities involving air pellet guns were successfully prosecuted in each year since 1990; what the average age was of individuals successfully prosecuted using these weapons; and if he will make a statement. [94228]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: From the information collected centrally on convictions it is not possible to identify cases arising from recorded crime involving the use of air weapons.

The available information relates to the number of persons convicted of various offences under the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1997 involving air weapons of all types and is contained in the table. The average age of individuals convicted is not available centrally.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) convictions and (b) cautions there were for persons under 17 years having an air weapon in a public place in each year since 1996; [95964]

(2) how many (a) convictions and (b) cautions there were for carrying a loaded air weapon in a public place in each year since 1996; [95965]

(3) how many (a) convictions and (b) cautions there were for persons under 14 having an air weapon or ammunition in each year since 1996. [95966]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information requested is shown in the table. This relates to England and Wales and covers the years 1996 to 2001.

Information for 2002 is due for publication in the late autumn of this year.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to restrict the use of air guns by minors. [96022]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The Government are determined to tackle the problem of air weapon misuse. We intend to increase from 14 years to 17 the age at which a person can own an air weapon, and to tighten up on when they can be used without adult supervision. In addition, we propose to introduce a new offence of having an air weapon in a public place without lawful cause or reasonable excuse. This offence will have a power of arrest attached to it.

Algerian Asylum Seekers

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers from Algeria were (a) granted asylum, (b) rejected for asylum and in subsequent appeal and (c) were removed from the UK in each of the last 10 years; [96016]

(2) how many Algerian citizens have sought asylum in the UK in each of the last 10 years. [96015]

Beverley Hughes: The available information is provided in the tables. The appeals allowed and dismissed figures, and the figures for removals and voluntary departures, given do not necessarily relate to the refusals in the same year. These could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records. The figures exclude subsequent appeals (court of appeal, judicial review and the House of Lords).

Algerians

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Algerians have been granted (a) temporary leave to stay and (b) permanent leave to stay in the UK in each of the last 10 years. [96014]

Beverley Hughes: The table gives the number of Algerian nationals granted leave to enter, extensions of leave to remain and settlement (leave to stay permanently) in the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years.

	Passengers given leave to enter the UK (number of journeys)	Grants of extensions of leave to remain (number of decisions)	Grants of settlement (number of persons)
2001	25,800	1,060	770
2000	21,600	850	1,010
1999	19,100	860	1,130
1998	18,500	600	710
1997	17,600	740	370
1996	18,200	740	400
1995	17,600	750	440
1994	18,900	760	400
1993	16,100	900	330
1992	15,300	1,180	240

Notes:
1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10, or three significant figures.
2. The figures given for passengers given leave to enter the UK are of the numbers of journeys made. A person who makes more than one journey is counted on each occasion.
3. Asylum-related grants of settlement rose sharply in 1999 and 2000 due to (a) a change in the rules reducing the qualifying periods for people granted asylum and exceptional leave to remain, and effectively increasing the number of people eligible for settlement and (b) grants of asylum or exceptional leave to remain under a backlog criteria which contributed significantly to the increase but has now largely been completed.

Detailed information on general immigration can be found in the Home Office publication, "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 2001", available in the Library and via the Home Office website: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/commandpubs1.html

Asylum Process

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average length of the asylum process, including appeals, was for individuals who arrived in the UK in 2002. [96540]

Beverley Hughes: The information is not available for individuals who applied for asylum in 2002 because some applications are still awaiting initial decision or appeals outcomes.

Information on the average time for cases decided, up to and including final appeal, will be published in the Home Office's Annual Report in order to report on the Public Service Agreement (PSA) target 7 published in July 2002.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for asylum, broken down by country of origin, have had their applications refused since 22 October 2001; and how many are known (a) to have left the United Kingdom and (b) to have remained within the United Kingdom. [96406]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 February 2003]: Information on asylum applications is published quarterly and provides data on initial decisions, appeal outcomes, and removals, by nationality for the latest available calendar months and quarter.

The tables show the number of refusals from initial decisions of asylum applications, and the number of asylum applicants removed from the United Kingdom, between 1 October 2001 and 30 September 2002. This information excludes the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions. Some applicants refused at the initial decision stage will be awaiting the outcome of appeals.

The removal figures do not necessarily relate to the initial decision refusals in the same period. Information on the total number of failed applicants known to have left the United Kingdom and the number known to have remained within the United Kingdom is not available. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records. In addition some applicants may leave the United Kingdom without informing the Immigration Service.

Information on the number of asylum applications, initial decisions and removals is published quarterly on the Home Office website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html. The next publication will be available from 28 February and will cover the final quarter of 2002.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers have been refused support by NASS on the basis of not having made their claim as soon as is reasonably practicable after arriving in the UK on each day since 8 January. [96863]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 February 2003]: Statistics on the operation of section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, which came into force on 8 January 2003, will be released in due course.

Car-jacking

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many car-jackings have taken place in the Greater London area in each of the last three years. [96248]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Car jacking is not a specific recorded crime category under Home Office counting rules and the information requested is not available centrally. Offences involving the theft or attempted theft of a motorised vehicle by threat or use of force are recorded as either robbery or theft of a motor vehicle.

Commissioners and Tribunals

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are (a) employed, and (b) planned to be employed, by each of the commissioners and tribunals which have been created by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 and the Intelligence Services Act 1994; and what the annual budget allocated to each commissioner and tribunal is. [95613]

Mr. Blunkett: The Investigatory Powers Tribunal, the Interception of Communications and Intelligence Services Commissioners are currently supported by a Secretariat consisting of three administrative staff. This is planned to rise to six administrative staff over the next few years.

The Office of the Surveillance Commissioner currently has eight support staff. Six surveillance commissioners, three assistant surveillance commissioners, a lead surveillance inspector and four surveillance inspectors assist the Chief Surveillance Commissioner.

For the current financial year the budget for the Office of the Surveillance Commissioner is £1,182,000 and that for the Investigatory Powers Tribunal, the Interception of Communications and Intelligence Services Commissioners Secretariat is £167,000.

Communications Data

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the voluntary code of practice which relates to the retention of communications data. [95560]

Mr. Blunkett: We intend to publish a draft Code of Practice shortly.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of (a) the number of officials who will be allowed to demand access to communications data and (b) the number of requests they are anticipated to make broken down by Government department; and if he will make a statement. [95559]

Mr. Blunkett: The number of officials ('designated persons') able to require communications data will be determined by Orders to be made under Chapter II, Part I of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. We aim to lay these Orders following consultation on the addition of public authorities to the Chapter II regime. The consultation paper, to be issued shortly, will contain the best available information on the numbers of requests for communications data by public authorities.

Congestion Charge

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions have taken place between law enforcement agencies and the (a) Mayor of London and (b) Information Commissioner concerning the retention of vehicle identification data collected by the congestion charge administration systems for law enforcement purposes. [95906]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The Metropolitan Police have discussed and agreed a protocol with Transport for London, under which data on vehicles of interest to the police in combating crime and terrorism are passed to and retained by congestion charge administration systems, and the police are then notified of any movements of the vehicles. I am assured that the data are retained and accessed in accordance with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1998 and the Information Commissioner has been consulted.

The Immigration Service have had no discussions with Transport for London or the Information Commissioner.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has not replied to the letter to him dated 28 November from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. S. Singh. [94695]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 11 February 2003.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 14 December from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mrs. Emilia Chinweokwu Unegbu-Kirby. [95673]

Mr. Blunkett: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 11 February 2003.

Cremation (Amputated Limbs)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the Regulation as to Cremation 1930, SR & O 1930/1016 to allow amputees to arrange for the cremation of their amputated limbs while they are still alive. [95870]

Hilary Benn: We have no such plans.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 21 January 2003, Official Report, column 291W, on the Criminal Records Bureau, what the cost was of the independent review conducted by the French Thornton Partnership Ltd.; and what proportion will be paid by (a) Capita and (b) the Home Office. [95077]

Hilary Benn: The cost of the independent review conducted by the French Thornton Partnership Ltd. was approximately £76,000.00. The entire cost was borne by the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB), an Executive Agency of the Home Office who commissioned the review.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken to inform applicants to the Criminal Records Bureau that ex-gratia payments can be made if there has been an element of maladministration in processing their application. [95871]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) has published a Complaints Procedure leaflet, which details the process customers should take if they are not completely satisfied with the service. All complaints regarding maladministration are rigorously investigated and if appropriate, financial redress is made. While there is no specific mention made of ex-gratia payments in the CRB's publicity material, a customer is invited as part of the complaints process to make a claim if he or she feels that an aspect of the service has been mishandled and that this has resulted in loss. Customers are given appropriate advice about redress when they contact the bureau. The complaints procedure is also available in the information pack that is issued to all registered bodies and on the disclosure website, www.disclosure.gov.uk.

The CRB's main concern is to resolve any issues affecting the process of an application. In the first instance, a customer is encouraged to contact the CRB help line service or put their complaint in writing to the CRB customer service manager. The applicant's details will then be directed to the appropriate department for investigation and they will endeavour to resolve the issues raised.

If the customer is not completely satisfied with the way their complaint has been handled, they would be advised to write to the CRB operations director. Should the applicant remain dissatisfied with the operations director's reply they are able to refer their complaint in writing to the chief executive. Alternatively, people may contact their MP who will then raise the matter with the Minister or CRB chief executive. The CRB has appointed a complaint mediator to resolve those complaints where the customer remains dissatisfied with the chief executive's reply. The complaint mediator will make recommendations to the CRB for resolving any outstanding issues.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library copies of the monthly Business Sector data reports that his Department has received in each of the last six months from the Criminal Records Bureau. [91176]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) produces a monthly Business Performance Report for consideration by the CRB Management Board. This provides detailed monthly management information on CRB performance.

As part of the Freedom of Information initiative consideration will be given to publishing these reports on the CRB website, and copying them to the Library, subject to any Commercial in Confidence issues.

Data Surveillance

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to revoke the powers of NHS bodies to undertake surveillance; and if he will make a statement. [95561]

Mr. Lammy: I have been asked to reply.

On 1 January 2003 a new National Health Service Counter Fraud and Security Management Service was created, which should be fully operational from 1 April 2003.

One of its tasks will be to review the arrangements for authorising applications to carry out directed surveillance under Part II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 in NHS trusts as recommended in paragraph 8.25 of the Chief Surveillance Commissioner's report for 2001–02 (HC68).

Drug Use

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the report commissioned by him and prepared by Steven Pudney of the University of Leicester on possible links between soft and hard drug use; and if he will make a statement. [95110]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Professor Pudney's report, "The Road to Ruin", studied the links between a group of drugs (LSD, amphetamine and cannabis) and subsequent use of heroin, cocaine, ecstasy and crack. It identifies a small but significant link between this group of drugs and cocaine and ecstasy. However the report indicates that there is little relationship between the use of this group and the later involvement with heroin and crack. It does not differentiate between cannabis, amphetamine and LSD (which is a Class A drug) so does not prove the case either way of cannabis as a gateway drug.

The findings of the report show that social, economic and family circumstances seem to be the dominant influences on young people's risk of becoming involved in crime and the most harmful drugs. We know that some young people are at particular risk of developing problems with substance misuse. That is why the Government is committed to helping those who are most at risk of developing drug problems through an improved range of early intervention and prevention programmes, which includes education and diversionary activities aimed at young people in high crime areas.

The other key influence on drug use identified in the report is the impact on individuals of the growing social acceptance of drug use and availability of supply. The Government is committed to tackling the social acceptance of drug use through ensuring that all young people and their parents understand the risks and dangers of drugs and know where to go for advice or help. A major new campaign will be launched this spring to drive home the risks of drugs, based on credible information on the dangers of all drugs and encourage young people and their parents to seek further information and advice where necessary. It is important that the message that all illegal drugs are harmful is clear, consistent and widely heard. The updated national drug strategy gives a stronger focus on education and prevention for young people. This means we must also make illegal drugs harder to obtain and tackle the supply at all levels. We will heavily penalise those caught dealing in any drugs, increase the recovery of drug-related criminal assets and strengthen enforcement at a local level. Class A drugs damage the lives of individuals, families and communities. That is why the updated national drug strategy has a tougher focus on Class A drugs.

Empty Homes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many empty homes his Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if he will establish an empty homes strategy within his Department; and if he will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92934]

Beverley Hughes: As at 1 April 1998 the Prison Service had 161 empty homes out of a total of 1,625. The number in each region is not known. There was an additional vacant property at the Emergency Planning College, which is now the responsibility of the Cabinet Office.

As at 24 January 2003 the Prison Service had three empty homes out of a total of 599. These are located in Leeds, Hertfordshire and London and have been vacant for less than six months.

All homes, whether empty or occupied, are under constant review. Generally homes which become vacant are not re-let but are sold on the open market. Consideration is being given to the reintroduction and extension of a scheme under which eligible occupiers are able to buy their homes. However, due to recruitment and retention problems in London and the south-east accommodation in these areas is being retained and in some cases converted for multiple occupation. These properties are re-let on a short-term basis, which will not normally exceed multiples of six months.

Experience Corps

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are members of the Experience Corps scheme; and how many have left. [95509]

Beverley Hughes: As at 31 December 2002, figures supplied by Experience Corps state that they had 79,145 members of which 75,028 had been placed and that they have removed the details of 2,983 members from their database since the programme began.

Infanticidal Mothers

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Criminal Cases Review Commission has to review the cases of mothers convicted of murdering their infant children. [95591]

Hilary Benn: Generally, the Commission can only examine the cases of those who apply to it. Whilst there are exceptions to this, such as the Commission approaching the convicted co-defendants of an applicant whose case merits a referral, this would not extend to examining whole categories of cases such as mothers convicted of murdering their infant children. The Commission publicises its work and the need for applications. Its information pack and audio and videotapes are circulated to Prisons and the Commission has attended prison information days at Her Majesty's Prison Holloway.

Factors such as the age and ill health of applicants and witnesses, and the possibility of the deterioration of evidence are taken into account in assigning priority to applications to the Commission. Priority is also assigned to cases that the Commission believes to be of particular significance to the criminal justice system. Otherwise applications are generally reviewed in date order of receipt, with in-custody cases generally being assigned one year of priority over at-liberty cases. The application of Sally Clark was given priority under this system.

Misuse of Drugs Act

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the responses he has received to the consultation on the draft guidelines in implementing the changes to section 8 of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 made by section 38 of the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001. [96237]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 6 February 2003]: In line with Cabinet Office Guidance on written consultations, a summary of the views expressed in the consultation on draft guidelines will be published alongside the decision made in the light of that consultation. Individual responses will be made available to anyone who asks for them providing the respondent has not sought confidentiality.

Passports

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals claimed their new passports were lost in the post in 2002; in how many of those cases the Passport Agency issued a replacement passport; and what discussions the Passport Agency has had with the Post Office to ensure new passports are not mislaid in the post. [96187]

Beverley Hughes: The UK Passport Service's records indicate that 2,982 passports were reported as having been lost in the post in the calendar year January to December 2002. Replacement passports would have been issued in response to almost all of these reports.

The UK Passport Service has on-going and regular discussions with the Royal Mail about the loss of passports in the post and about options for delivery which might reduce the number of losses. They work together on investigations into the disappearance of passports in the postal system.

The UK Passport Service issues around 5.5 million passports annually and the vast majority arrive safely at their destination using first class mail. Also, the digital passport contains advanced security features which makes it extremely difficult to manipulate and is of limited value in the hands of somebody other than the rightful holder. Nevertheless losses in the post remain a concern to the UK Passport Service and it is actively investigating alternative, more secure and convenient methods of delivering passports to its customers. It hopes to reach a business decision on this shortly.

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995 96 to 2002 03; and if he will make a statement. [92443]

Mr. Blunkett: The number of press releases issued each year by the Department was:

	Number
1995	308
1996	404
1997	386
1998	524
1999	450
2000	472
2001	[1]404
2002	480
2003	37 (in January)

[1] Press notices for the Prison Service are included in this total from May 2001.

Notes:

1. These figures include press notices issued on behalf of the Prisons, Police, Probation and Fire Inspectorates.
2. Quarterly figures for the past seven years could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Surveillance Commissioner

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to respond to the observations on the powers of the police to undertake surveillance made by the Surveillance Commissioner in paragraph 8.9 of his Annual Report (HC 68); and if he will make a statement. [95557]

Mr. Blunkett: It is for Chief Constables to implement the recommendations made following inspections by a Surveillance Commissioner. The Chief Surveillance Commissioner can, if necessary, report to my right hon .Friend the Prime Minister (Mr .Blair) on any failure to implement recommendations.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to remove the powers of parish councils to undertake surveillance as recommended by the Surveillance Commissioner in paragraph 8.14.13 of his annual report (HC 68); and if he will make a statement. [95562]

Mr. Blunkett: Yes.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to review the draft Codes of Practice which relate to surveillance to take account of the observations made by the Surveillance Commissioner in paragraph 9.2 of his Annual Report (HC 68); and if he will make a statement. [95563]

Mr. Blunkett: The draft codes became statutory codes of practice on 1 August 2002. The statutory codes take account of the comments made by the Chief Surveillance Commissioner.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to address the observations on NHS Scotland, made by the Surveillance Commissioner in paragraph 8.12 of his Annual Report (HC 68); and if he will make a statement. [95564]

Mr. Blunkett: Surveillance activities by National Health Service (NHS) Scotland are governed by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Scotland) Act 2000. The Chief Surveillance Commissioner has written to the First Minister in Scotland about the issues raised in his Annual Report (HC 68).

Surveillance Warrants

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many communications surveillance warrants were issued in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland in each year since 1990. [95863]

Mr. Blunkett: The figures for interception warrants issued since 1990 are published annually in the reports of the Commissioner, initially appointed under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 (IOCA) and, since 2 October 2000, under the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000 (RIPA). Copies of the reports are placed in the Library.

Figures for 2002 are 1,466 (England and Wales) and 139 (Scotland). The Interception Commissioner has given his consent that these figures should be published in advance of his annual report.

Telephone Helplines

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many telephone helplines are sponsored by his Department; and which of these helplines are charged at (a) national rate, (b) premium rate and (c) local rate. [95715]

Beverley Hughes: The information on help lines is as follows:

Temporary Visa Holders

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visas for temporary stays in the United Kingdom (a) were issued and (b) have expired since 29 October 2001; and of the latter (i) how many holders are known to have left the country and (ii) how many holders are known not to have left the country (A) because of applications for asylum, (B) for other lawful reasons and (C) for other unlawful reasons. [96407]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 10 February 2003]: The latest available data on entry clearance applications for temporary purposes are 1,424,880 applications granted in 2000.

Decisions made in 2001 have not yet been published due to a change in the data available. Data for 2001 and 2002 will be published later this year.

Information on the number of visas which have expired is not available.

Information on the number of visa holders who are known to have left the United Kingdom is not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost by examination of case records. Additionally, these individuals may leave the United Kingdom without informing the Immigration Service.

Detailed information on general immigration can be found in the Home Office publication, "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 2001", available in the Library and via the Home Office website http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/commandpubs1.html.

Timber

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent advice his Department has issued to procurement staff regarding the procurement of timber from legal and sustainable sources. [95732]

Beverley Hughes: A Timber Procurement Bulletin was sent to all Home Office Procurement Units, agencies and non-departmental public bodies (NDPB's) in June 2002. It is also available on the Home Office intranet site. The bulletin included the model contract specification clause, promulgated by Department for Environment, Farming and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) in May 2002, together with background information and contact points for further information.

Visas

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those countries from which citizens do not require a visa to enter the UK, but to which UK citizens do require a visa to gain entry. [95998]

Beverley Hughes: The visa requirements for UK nationals visiting other countries vary depending on the purpose and duration of stay and therefore a list of countries as requested cannot be provided. However, details of the visa and entry requirements for UK nationals visiting other countries can be found under the travel section of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website: www.fco.gov.uk. Details of UK visa requirements can be found on the UK Visas website: www.ukvisas.gov.uk

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many sites have been referred by the Government on the basis of intelligence as having weapons of mass destruction to the UN weapons inspection team in Iraq. [96266]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government regularly share information with the UN weapons inspection teams, including information about sites of concern.

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many searches were initiated by UK intelligence of the 100 sites investigated in Iraq by UN weapons inspectors. [96267]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government regularly shares information with the UN weapons inspectors. It is a matter for them to decide upon how to follow up on information passed to them.

Afghanistan

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress his Department has made in meeting its public service agreement target on reducing opium production in Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement. [96291]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK is co-ordinating international support for Afghanistan's drug control efforts and has produced, in consultation with the Afghan government, other donors and international agencies, a strategy for building up Afghan drug law enforcement capacity and providing alternative livelihoods to opium poppy farmers. Experience in Thailand and Pakistan shows that a concerted and co-ordinated effort to eliminate opium poppy cultivation can be successful in the long-term.

At the Afghanistan Reconstruction Conference in January 2002 the UK pledged £200 million of financial assistance over four years.£ 65 million has already been committed to humanitarian and reconstruction programmes. In December 2002 Her Majesty's Customs & Excise delivered the first of a series of counter-narcotics courses for the Afghan police. The Government's Public Service Agreement to contribute to the elimination of Afghan opium cultivation in ten years comes into effect on 1 April 2003. Officials are working on a delivery plan.

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions his Department has had with (a) the US Government, (b) the Turkish Government and (c) the German Government regarding building a secure future for the people of Afghanistan; and if he will make a statement. [96294]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Afghanistan is frequently on the agenda of meetings at the UN and NATO, in which representatives of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office take part along with colleagues from the US, Turkey and Germany. This is in addition to discussions on Afghanistan at regular bilateral meetings with the countries mentioned. Periodic G8 and EU meetings on Afghanistan provide further opportunities to talk to the US and German governments.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the estimated amount of opium produced in Afghanistan was in each year from 1997 to date. [96471]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since 1994 the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime has published an annual opium poppy survey for Afghanistan. The estimated amounts (in metric tons) of opium produced for the period since 1997 are as follows:

1998—2,693
1999—4,565
2000—3,276
2001—185
2002—3,400

American Prisons (UK Nationals)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK nationals are held in (a) prison, (b) custody and (c) detention in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement. [95255]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As of 30 January 2003 we were aware of 534 British citizens in prison in the US, 97 British citizens in custody in the US and 60 British citizens in detention in the US. The table gives a breakdown of the numbers detained in each of our consular districts in the US. We have interpreted the "in prison" cases as those serving custodial sentences following a criminal conviction, the "in custody" cases as those awaiting trial or sentencing and the "in detention" cases as those detained by the US Immigration and Nationalisation Service (INS).

British Nationals detained in the United States as of 30 January 2003

Balkans

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit the Balkan countries to assess the progress that has been made towards peace and security in the region; and if he will make a statement. [96293]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary visited the Balkans in November 2002 and held useful talks with the political leaders in Belgrade, Pristina and Sarajevo. I also visited the region several times last year. I would expect further such visits to go ahead this year. My right hon. Friend and I were encouraged by progress made so far, especially in maintaining peace and security in Bosnia and Kosovo. The Foreign Secretary and I have also held talks with Lord Ashdown and Michael Steiner, the UN Secretary General's Special Representative for Kosovo, in respect of their work in Bosnia and Kosovo. The new arrangements redefining the relationship between Serbia and Montenegro are a good example of how differences can be resolved in the Balkans through peaceful negotiation. We will continue to engage closely with all governments in the region to integrate them more fully with the EU and international community. This includes improved co-operation with the International Criminal Tribunal on the former Yugoslavia.

Diplomatic Representation

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) embassies and (b) high commissions there are abroad; and how many have been (i) closed and (ii) opened in each year since 1997. [96304]

Mr. Straw: The FCO is currently represented overseas in 106 embassies and 46 high commissions.

The table gives details of the opening of embassies and high commissions since 1997. There have been no closures of embassies or high commissions during this period. In some cases the mission has been opened previously but not formally as an embassy or high commission. The previous status of the mission is signified in the table.

In addition to these missions the FCO has opened 18 subordinate posts and closed six.

Post opening and closing since 1997

EU Accession Anniversary

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the costs were of events and publicity sponsored and organised by his Department in the United Kingdom and abroad to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the United Kingdom's accession to the European Union. [96576]

Mr. MacShane: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office produced a variety of written material to mark the 30th anniversary of the UK's EU accession for use in electronic and print media. This included articles for the press and a quiz, displayed on the FCO website and distributed to the regional press via the Government News Network (GNN) at a cost of £500.

The FCO also sponsored a display of European Poems on the Underground related to the 30th anniversary. This project was designed to raise awareness of the anniversary and of the FCO website (which gives detailed information about the EU) among the 2.2 million people who use the tube every day, as well as wider media. The total cost of the project was £15,000.

EU Association Agreements

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sanctions are available to the EU in the event of a non-EU state breaching the terms of an Association Agreement with the EU. [96359]

Mr. MacShane: The provisions of the Association Agreements vary. In the case of Association Agreements between the EU and Euro-Mediterranean Partner countries there are provisions for referring any dispute between the Parties to arbitration. If either Party considers that the other has failed to fulfil an obligation under the Agreement it may take appropriate measures, giving priority to those which least disturb the functioning of the Agreement.

Guantanamo Bay (British Prisoners)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure British prisoners detained at Guantanamo Bay are treated in accordance with international law. [95911]

Mr. Straw: I have had regular contacts with the US Secretary of State, Colin Powell, about the position of the British detainees at Guantanamo Bay, most recently on 23 January. We have made clear our position that, whatever their status, the detainees are entitled to humane treatment, and, if prosecuted, a fair trial. The US has assured us it is treating the men humanely and in accordance with the principles of the Geneva Conventions.

British officials have visited the detainees on four occasions to check on their welfare and none showed any visible signs of mistreatment.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the US Administration to arrange the (a) repatriation and (b) trial of British prisoners held at Guantanamo Bay; and if he will make a statement. [95912]

Mr. Straw: I have had regular contacts with the US Secretary of State, Colin Powell, about the position of the British Detainees at Guantanamo Bay, most recently on 23 January. We have encouraged the US to move forward with the process of determining the detainees' future, and shall continue to do so. Any prosecution of the detainees in the UK would be a matter for the Crown Prosecution Service, not the Government.

Israel

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 21st October 2002 UK Ministers have raised with Israel in (a) bilateral meetings and (b) correspondence the issue of goods from settlements in the Occupied Territories. [96360]

Mr. MacShane: This specific issue has not been raised in Ministerial contacts since 21 October 2002. The UK Permanent Representative to the European Union raised it in talks with the Israeli Ambassador to the EU in January.

Richard Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his Answer of 3 February, Official Report, column 8W, on Israel, whether proposals have yet been produced by Israel on the issue of goods exported to the EU which come from settlements in the Occupied Territories. [96361]

Mr. MacShane: Israel has not yet produced proposals. Now that the election period is over, we hope Israel will do so without delay.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which European capital cities the Minister for Europe has visited since his appointment; and which European capital cities he plans to visit over the next three months. [96580]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 10 February 2003]: I have visited Berlin, Bratislava, Brussels, Budapest, Copenhagen, Dublin, Paris, Prague, Rome, Tallinn Vienna and Vilnius since my appointment. I will continue my programme of visits to European capitals over the next three months and beyond.

Palestinian Authority

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the use made by the Palestinian Authority of funding supplied to it by the European Union; and what steps are taken to ensure that such aid is used for the purposes for which it is intended. [96397]

Mr. MacShane: As my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary made clear on 21 January 2003, Official Report column 149, it is our assessment that EU assistance to the Palestinian Authority provides essential support, without which it is likely that it would not be able to continue operating. At the London meeting on Palestinian reform on 14 January, there was widespread recognition that the Palestinian Authority had achieved great progress in reforming the way that their financial systems operate.

We attach great importance to the highest standards of financial management being adhered to in the disbursement of all EU funding and take seriously any allegations of misuse. The European Commission has in place a number of stringent monitoring and control measures in the implementation of EU financial assistance programmes and disbursements of EU monies to the Palestinian Authority. To date, the Commission has found no evidence that EU monies have been misused by the Palestinian Authority in order to finance terrorism or for anything other than their agreed purpose.

The European Commission has committed itself to continuing to help the Ministry of Finance ensure proper oversight of all Palestinian Authority finances. This is a core objective of several conditions attached to EU budgetary support. A letter of 21 January 2003 from External Relations Commissioner Chris Patten to the European Parliament setting out in detail the Commission's oversight of funding to the Palestinian Authority is available on its Europa website www.europa.eu.int.

Saudi Arabia (British Detainees)

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment the Department has made of whether there is forensic evidence that incriminates the British detainees charged with bombings in Saudi Arabia. [95523]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 6 February 2003, Official Report, column 386W.

Serbia and Montenegro

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the decision by the Yugoslav parliament to loosen ties between Serbia and Montenegro; what implications he estimates this will have for the future of the region; and if he will make a statement. [96292]

Mr. MacShane: On 4 February I congratulated the leaders of Serbia and Montenegro on adopting their new Constitutional Charter, which redefined future relations between the two republics and replaced the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. In doing so they have clearly shown to the region a readiness to resolve their differences through peaceful negotiation. Under the new arrangements Serbia and Montenegro will share control of foreign affairs, defence, foreign economic relations, internal economic relations and human and minority rights. But they have also retained the option of reconsidering, after three years and via a referendum, the status of Serbia and Montenegro.

Sudan

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the sale of the Alenia Marconi Systems radar system to the Government of Sudan and its use by that government. [96240]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 7 February 2003]: A modern air traffic control system is needed for the large number of commercial and humanitarian flights that fly over and within Sudan and is crucial for the safety of United Nations and Non-Governmental Organisations staff involved in the delivery of vital humanitarian aid in Sudan, the majority of which is currently transported by air. Officials have discussed with aid agencies their concerns about the system.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on arms exports to Sudan; and what steps it has taken to support the EU common position on arms exports to Sudan. [96243]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 7 February 2003]: EU Common Position 94/165/CFSP, adopted on 16 March 1994, imposed an arms embargo on Sudan in response to the ongoing civil war. We fully support the EU arms embargo and expect it to remain as long as civil war continues.

Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with European Union Member States on the opportunity for human rights observers to visit Abdullah Ocalan in prison in Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [96275]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has not discussed this issue with EU member states.

The Council of Europe's Committee on the Prevention of Torture has visited Imrali prison where Mr .Ocalan is held.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when Her Majesty's Government was approached by the French Government to seek agreement for a relaxation of the European Union travel ban on President Mugabe of Zimbabwe; what the purpose was of seeking the relaxation; over what period the allocation was sought; which other Ministers and officials were covered by the prospect of relaxation; when agreement with France was reached; what the reasons for agreeing to the relaxation were; and if he will make a statement. [94095]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 28 January 2003]: The French mentioned, in the margins of the Copenhagen summit in December, that they were considering inviting Mugabe to Paris for the France-Africa summit scheduled two days after sanctions are due to expire. The French made a formal written request to all EU partners on 23 January; this included requests for visa waivers for Robert Mugabe, Mrs. Mugabe and Foreign Minister Stan Mudenge to attend the France-Africa summit on 20 and 21 February. Apart from this request and responses by a number of member states, which are EU internal documents, there was no correspondence on this matter. Discussion on this issue continues in Brussels. We have made clear throughout our support for the sanctions regime including the travel ban.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the Foreign Secretary was informed of the French Government's intentions to request a visa waiver for Mr. Robert Mugabe to attend the Franco-African summit in Paris in February. [94727]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Moore) today, UIN 94095.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British Government was first informed by the French Government that the French Government wished to invite President Mugabe to the Franco-African Summit in Paris on 19 to 21 February 2003; what the British Government's response was; what discussions the UK

Government had with the French Government on this issue; if he will place copies of the relevant correspondence in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [96373]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 7 February 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Moore) today, UIN 94095.

Written Answers to Questions

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Broadband Access (Courts)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what proportion of (a) magistrates' and (b) other courts have broadband access; and what targets have been set for full broadband access in each case. [95742]

Yvette Cooper: For (a) magistrates' courts in England and Wales, a high band width, wide area network has been rolled out to nearly 90 per cent. of staff. This roll-out is scheduled to be completed by April 2003, with the exception of one court that is awaiting the completion of a building project. In (b) the Crown Court in England and Wales, 5 per cent. of our court staff currently have access to a high band width, wide area network. We plan to extend such access to all Crown Court staff by April 2006. We are currently considering plans for extending access to the county courts of England and Wales.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, how many appeals against closure of magistrates' courts have been dealt with by the Department since 1997; how many were (a) refused and (b) allowed; and if she will make a statement. [95473]

Yvette Cooper: The number of appeals on Courthouse closures given to me by my officials is as follows. Since 1996, the Lord Chancellor's Department has received 83 appeals from paying authorities, against determinations made by Magistrates' Courts Committees to close Magistrate's Courts. Details are shown in the table.

Year	Appeals Decided	Allowed	Dismissed
1996	5	0	5
1997	17	2	15
1998	26	1	25
1999	9	1	8
2000	11	1	10
2001	12	0	12
2002	2	0	2
2003	1	0	1

PRIVY COUNCIL

Lord Chancellor (Pension Arrangements)

Norman Baker: To ask the President of the Council if the Lord Chancellor will make it his policy to end the arrangement whereby holders of his office receive pension arrangements which exceed the ceiling for tax relief proposed in the Government's Green Paper on pensions [96410]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Government is still consulting on its proposals in the recent pensions green paper and associated paper on tax simplification.

E-mail Addresses

Mr. Yeo: To ask the President of the Council by what e-mail address members of the public may contact him; and for each e-mail address if he will state (a) the date it became active and (b) the number of e-mails received in each month since activation [97466]

Mr. Robin Cook: The public may contact me on the following email address: president@pco.x.gsi.gov.uk. Details of how to contact me and Ben Bradshaw are available on the Department's website: www.pco.gov.uk

This email address has been active since 16 October 2000.

The department does not record information on the number of emails received into this account.

Online Sales/Purchaes

Mr. Yeo: To ask the President of the Council what (a) products, (b) goods and (c) services were bought online by his Department in each of the last five years. [97467]

Mr. Robin Cook: My Department buys most of its stationery online. Training courses, hotel accommodation and air tickets have on occasion been purchased online in the last five years.

TRANSPORT

Air Transport

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the publication of updated consultation documents for the South East on the future development of air transport in the UK; when this consultation period will end; when a White Paper is expected to be published; and what legislation he expects to emerge following its publication. [96883]

Mr. Jamieson: We plan to issue a revised consultation document for the South East, including possible Gatwick options, later this month. The current consultation period throughout the UK will run for a further four months from the date of issue. We expect to announce our conclusions, and any decisions on legislative measures, in a White Paper towards the end of the year.

Car Parking Spaces

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many car parking spaces were provided for (a) himself, (b) Ministers of State, (c) Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State, (d) Special Advisers, (e) departmental officials and (f) contractors in each year since 1997. [95291]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 19 November 2002, to the Hon Member for Christchurch (Mr. Chope) Official Report, column 50W. There are four parking spaces for Ministers' official cars. No spaces are allocated for special advisers or specifically for contractors.

Consultants

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department and its predecessors spent on consultants in each year from 1997. [94235]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given today to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster), UIN 93235.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent on by predecessor Departments on external consultants in matters relating to transport in each year since 1997. [93235]

Mr Jamieson: I refer to the hon. Member to my pursuant answer to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 698W, on external consultants, if he will list the consultants used, and the nature and the cost of the work in each case. [93236]

Mr. Jamieson: A list of the consultants used and the total spend against each has been placed in the Libraries of the House. Details of the nature and cost of the work in each case are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the external consultants used by his Department since its inception; how much each was paid; what the terms of reference for each were; and if he will make a statement. [93956]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 28 January 2003]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given today to the hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Foster), UIN 9326.

Crossrail

Mike Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of whether the Strategic Rail Authority has sufficient resources within the existing Comprehensive Spending Review settlement to enable the public sector to contribute to construction of Crossrail; and if he will make a statement; [95940].

(2) whether the proposal submitted to him by London Regional Metro for an East-West Rail Link for London is being considered as part of the business case for Crossrail; and if he will make a statement. [95939]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government has already committed £54 million in support of development work on Crossrail.

It is premature to determine how best Crossrail may be implemented or financed until route options have been considered and a business case for the project established.

The Strategic Rail Authority and Transport for London are aiming to report to Ministers on these matters by the end of February. Their report is separate from the LRM proposal.

Departmental Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list consultations his Department has conducted since it was established; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed. [97425]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport was established in May 2002. However, a full list of consultations on transport issues that have taken place from May 2002 (as DfT) and before (as DTLR) can be found on the Department's website (www.dft.gov.uk). DfT consultation documents are available on the relevant policy website link:

Aviation (www.aviation.dft.gov.uk/conindex.htm)

Local Transport (www.local-transport.dft.gov.uk/conindex.htm)

Mobility and Inclusion Unit (www.mobility-unit.dft.gov.uk/conindex.htm)

Railways (www.railways.dft.gov.uk/conindex.htm)

Roads, Vehicles and Road Safety (www.roads.dft.gov.uk/conindex.htm)

Shipping (www.shipping.dft.gov.uk/conindex.htm)

DfT consultations are also available through the UK Online website, (www. ukonline.gov.uk).

All these documents follow the Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation (www.consultation.gov.uk), which came into effect on 1 January 2001.

E-mail Addresses

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what e-mail address members of the public may contact (a) him and (b) each of the Ministers in his Department; and for each e-mail address if he will state (i) the date it became active and (ii) the number of e-mails received in each month since activation. [97440]

Mr. Jamieson: The information relating to e-mail address for each Minister is shown as follows.

Contact	Published e-mail address	Activation date
Secretary of State for Transport	alistair.darling@dft.gsi.gov.uk	12 June 2002
Departmental Minister	john.spellar@dft.gsi.gov.uk	12 June 2002
Departmental Minister	david.jamieson@dft.gsi.gov.uk	12 June 2002

Information about e-mails received monthly could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Local Transport Plan (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the local transport plan budget was for Leeds in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04; what the spending was in 2001–02; whether full spending is likely to be reached in 2002–03; and what action was taken over under-spending. [96966]

Mr. Jamieson: The Local Transport Plan capital allocations for Leeds City Council were as follows:

	£ million
(a) 2001–02	19.62
(b) 2002–03	26.645
(c) 2003–04	25.823

These figures comprise funding for Integrated Transport, Maintenance and Major Schemes.

Spending in 2001–02 was £20.898 million.

The projected outturn figure for 2002–03 is £23.0 million, which represents an underspend of £3.645 million. Some £1.900 million of this relates to the East Leeds Link Road where the start of construction has been delayed due to prolonged negotiations surrounding developers/landowner contributions. However, this funding can be rolled forward into 2003–04 and will be spent then. The remaining £1.745 million underspend relates to Integrated Transport and Maintenance. This cannot be rolled forward into 2003–04 but it is intended that Single Capital Pot flexibilities will be used so that the resource can be made available for transport in future years.

The Local Transport Capital Settlement letter of 10 December 2002 made clear to local authorities that those failing to deliver would have their indicative allocations reduced in order to free up fimds for better performing authorities.

London Underground PPP

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish further letters from his Department on the treatment of revenue shortfalls in the first phase of public-private partnership for the London Underground; [96574].

(2) what terms of the agreement have been reached between Transport for London, the Mayor of London's transport agency and his Department's officials on the proposed public-private partnership for the London Underground; [96573]

(3) what recent discussions have taken place between (a) his officials, (b) Transport for London, (c) the Mayor of London's transport agency and (d) Department of Transport officials to finalise arrangements for the proposed public-private partnership for the London Underground; and if he will make a statement on the implications for public finances of the agreement. [96572]

Mr. Jamieson: The exchange of letters between My right hon.Friend the Secretary of State and the Mayor, and between officials of the Department and Transport for London, was placed in the Libraries of the House on Tuesday 4 February.

The level of grant provision for London Underground remains as determined in the 2002 Spending Review. The Government has, however, reiterated its earlier commitments to review grant levels during future Spending Reviews, and in the event of major unforeseen circumstances.

Rail Freight

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the existing rail freight links between the North of England and the Continent. [97272]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority's strategic plan, published on 30 January, explains its priorities including those for freight. The Government published a report on its targets and progress in meeting them in relation to the 10-year plan on 17 December 2002. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House.

Rail Services

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what services (a) in the north west and (b) in the UK as a whole will be cut under proposals announced by the Strategic Rail Authority. [92575]

Mr. Jamieson: I understand from the Strategic Rail Authority that in the UK as a whole 104 services per day will be withdrawn, out of a total of about 17,000 per day. 44 of these operate in the north west; 12 are Virgin Crosscountry services between Birmingham and Blackpool and 32 are Central Trains services between Manchester airport and Crewe. Services on a number of other routes will be reduced. Virgin Crosscountry routes affected are between Birmingham and Cardiff, Poole, Swansea and Swindon, and the non-CrossCountry routes where services will be reduced are Oxford to Bristol, Southampton to Bournemouth, and Derby to Birmingham.

Road Tax

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles qualified for 25-year road tax exemption discs in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001. [97074]

Mr. Jamieson: The 25 Year Exempt taxation class was replaced by the Historic Vehicle taxation class in March 1998. This class applies to vehicles constructed before 1 January 1973. The number of vehicles licensed under the Historic Vehicle class for the years in question is shown in the following table.

Year	Number of licensed vehicles (Exempt Historic vehicle class)
1999	353,543
2000	339,996
2001	328,072

Road Traffic Accidents

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road traffic accidents have been recorded on the A14 between Stowmarket and Bury St. Edmunds in (a) 2000–01 (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–February 2003. [97393]

Mr. Jamieson: The following table shows the recorded number of accidents along the A14 between Stowmarket and Bury St. Edmunds, in 2000 and in 2001. Figures for 2002 are not yet available.

Year	Total
2000	37
2001	34

Unlicensed Vehicles

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people have been prosecuted in the London Borough of Harrow for having an unlicensed vehicle in each of the last five years. [96798]

Mr. Jamieson: Specific figures are not available for the London Borough of Harrow but the number of cases successfully prosecuted by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's local office at Stanmore (which includes that Harrow area) were as follows (records were kept centrally before 2000–01):

Year	Prosecutions
2000–01	16,423
2001–02	17,325
2002–03[1]	16,297

[1] January

Many other unlicensed vehicle cases were settled out of court by payment of a penalty. Figures are only available for the whole of the London district:

Year
2000–01	39,932
2001–02	42,190
2002–03[1]	32,442

[1] Denotes nine months to January only.

DEFENCE

Al Yamamah Deal

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the report on the Al Yamamah deal with Saudi Arabia will be published. [96172]

Mr. Ingram: I assume the question refers to the 1992 National Audit Office report about the Al Yamamah programme. The report refers to confidential arrangements between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Saudi Arabia on a programme which is of great significance for British jobs and exports. The report has not been published because publication would breach that pledge of confidentiality; the report has therefore been withheld under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Airborne Stand-off Radar Programme

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the airborne stand-off radar programme to be completed. [95420]

Mr. Ingram: The acquisition phase of the ASTOR programme is due to complete in 2008, when the fifth ASTOR system enters service. The contract with Raytheon Systems Ltd also provides for contractor logistic support until 2015. On current plans ASTOR will remain in service until 2035.

Anti-tank Weapon

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he expects the new anti-tank weapon to enter service on time and within the Ministry of Defence's proposed budget. [95414]

Mr. Ingram: Yes. The light forces anti-tank guided weapon system is expected to enter service in 2006 within its approved cost and timescale.

Armed Forces (Statistics)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people there were in the UK (a) Army, (b) Navy and (c) Air Force in each year from 1996–97 to 2003–04 (planned). [97346]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to table 2.8 of the United Kingdom Defence Statistics 2002, which provides historic information up to April 2002.

Each Service sets manpower requirements at the level required to deliver the capabilities needed to meet their endorsed requirements. The requirements, and the performance in meeting them, are reported by the Defence Analytical Services Agency, both annually in United Kingdom Defence Statistics and quarterly under National Statistics arrangements. Copies of these can be found in the Library of the House.

Armed Small Craft

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase the numbers of armed small craft in the Royal Navy. [95874]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 329W.

Britannia

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total sale proceeds have been from the disposal of Her Majesty's yacht Britannia; and if he will make a statement. [95776]

Mr. Ingram: A contract for the sale of the former HMY BRITANNIA was let by the Ministry of Defence's Disposal Services Agency (DSA) (then the Disposal Sales Agency) in 1998. I am withholding the information requested in accordance with Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Capita

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his Answer of 9 January, Official

Report, column 60W, on Capita, if he will give (a) the value, (b) a brief description and (c) the length of each contract. [96757]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 11 February 2003]:

Capita Business Services Ltd

MSC5–07998	Consultancy Service Duration: October 2000 to February 2003
ABRO1A/0112	Consultancy for Staff Recruitment Duration: Contract placed March 2000 and now complete.

CP21B-1249	Consultancy for Staff Recruitment Duration: December 1998 to December 2001

Capita Property Services Ltd

DABMSC-10851	Subsumed into WS35–806

Capita Property Consultancy

WS35–806	Project management Services Duration: Contract placed May 1992 and now complete

The values of individual contracts are withheld under Exemption 13 of the Code of practice on Access to Government Information but the total value of these contracts is approximately £1.8 million.

Defence Finance

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much unallocated funds there were in financial years (a) 2002–03, (b) 2003–04 and (c) 2004–05 under the headings of (i) operations, (ii) personnel, (iii) logistics, (iv) procurement, (v) central, (vi) war pensions and allowances, (vii) Armed Forces Retired Pay and Pensions and (viii) unprogrammed operations/conflict prevention; and if he will make a statement. [96748]

Mr. Ingram: In the current financial year, there are no defence funds that are not allocated to budget holders. For the years 2003–04 and 2004–05, the Spending Review settlement included a small non-cash unallocated provision to deal with certain non-cash pressures.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the share of the defence budget accounted for by (a) procurement costs and (b) personnel costs in each year from 1982–83 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [96818]

Mr. Ingram: Figures for the share of Ministry of Defence expenditure attributed to defence equipment procurement costs for the years 1982–83 to 2000–01 and personnel costs for the years 1982–83 to 2002–03 are presented in the following table.

Comparable data for equipment procurement expenditure are not available beyond 2000–01 following the introduction of Resource Accounting and Budgeting. However, data for personnel costs are available for 2001–02 and 2002–03 on a resource basis.

The figures are shown for each year as a percentage share of total defence expenditure. Equipment Procurement and personnel expenditure figures for the years up to, and including 2000–01 are published by the Defence Analytical Services Agency (DASA) in UK Defence Statistics and pre-1992 were reported in Volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates (both of these are available in the Library of the House). The most recent resource based personnel figures for 2001–02 have been extracted from the MOD Departmental Resource Accounts (DRAc). For 2002–03, the planned outturn has been extracted from MOD Winter Supplementary Estimates.

[1] "Total Defence Expenditure" represents Departmental Expenditure in "cash" and from 2001–02 in "near cash" terms. It differs slightly from the "Adjusted Defence Budget" which excludes a variety of accounting and definitional adjustments as outlined in the footnotes to table 1.3 of UK Defence Statistics.
[2] The figure for "personnel costs" used as the basis for the percentage share, up to and including 2000–01 is the expenditure in "cash" terms as published in UKDS 2002 Table 1.3. For 2001–02 data have been extracted from the MOD Departmental Resource Accounts (DRAc). For 2002–03 data have been extracted from the MOD Winter Supplementary Estimates. Data for 2002–03 are the planned outturn. Personnel costs include Service and Civilian pay, other allowances and ERNIC contribution.

Defence Industries (French Market Access)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress he has made since 14 October 2002 in securing better market access for UK companies in France. [95426]

Mr. Ingram: Ministry of Defence support for defence companies seeking markets in France, and elsewhere, is available through the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO). DESO provides advice and assistance tailored to individual market opportunities. Additionally, in 2003, MOD is supporting a number of opportunities for United Kingdom companies to engage with potential markets in France and listed below are major events in the UK and France at which British and French industry will be represented.

Date	Event	Location
13 March 2003	Small and Medium Sized Enterprises "Shop Window"	UK

Defence Spending

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of procurement expenditure of his Department in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms in each year since 1980–81; and what his estimate is of procurement expenditure as a percentage of total spending in each year since 1980–81. [95798]

Mr. Ingram: Figures for the amount the Ministry of Defence spends on defence equipment procurement for the years 1980–81 to 2000–01 are presented in the table below. The figures are shown for each year in (a) cash terms, (b) real terms and (c) as a percentage of total defence expenditure. Equipment Procurement figures are published by the Defence Analytical Services Agency (DASA) in the United Kingdom Defence Statistics and pre- 1992 were reported in Volume 2 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates (both of these are available in the Library of the House). Comparable data beyond 2000–01 are not available following the introduction of Resource Accounting & Budgeting.

Eurofighter

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 638W, on the Eurofighter, what criteria were used in selecting areas for the testing of Eurofighter. [97601]

Mr. Ingram: The three managed areas designated for the training of fast jet crews were selected on the basis that they were sufficiently large to enable training at high speeds, were relatively close to operating bases, and minimised the effect on civilair routes.

It is anticipated that the majority of supersonic flights will take place over the sea in the two more southerly areas. The third most northerly area is essential for backup training, particularly when sea and wind states are determined to be too high for safe training over the water. Supersonic flight will not be permitted over land.

Eurofighter Typhoon

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the Eurofighter Typhoon to be operational and at what stage ground strike capability will be added. [97232]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 11 February 2003]: We expect Typhoon to be available for operational deployment in the second half of this decade. The aircraft will be multi-role. Designed primarily for air superiority, it will be fitted with an initial ground attack capability. Thereafter, it will benefit from progressive enhancements to its ground attack capabilities as part of the aircraft's planned procurement programme.

Field Hospitals

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) anaesthetists, (b) doctors, (c) surgeons, (d) trained nurses and (e) commissioned nurses there are in each reserve field hospital unit. [96934]

Dr. Moonie: The strength of (a) anaesthetists, (b) doctors, (c) surgeons and (d) commissioned nurses within each reserve field hospital, as at February 2003, is given in the table. There are no other rank trained nurses in reserve field hospitals.

Field hospital	201	202	203	204	205	207	208	212	243	256	CVHQ AMS

Flags of Convenience

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ships chartered for military operations are registered under flags of convenience. [96511]

Mr. Ingram: The definition of flag of convenience is loose and ambiguous and indeed, the Department for Transport does not officially recognise this terminology. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 7 February 2003, Official Report, column 464W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Prosser), regarding the flag states of the vessels chartered for use in the Mediterranean/Gulf regions.

Future Integrated Soldier Technology Programme

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what criteria will inform his decision on selection of the prime contractor for the Future Integrated Soldier Technology programme, with particular reference to (a) price and (b) technical specification; [95423]

(2) when he plans to announce selection of the prime contractor for the Future Integrated Soldier Technology programme; and whether the Future Integrated Soldier Technology programme will be the centrepiece of infantrymen's personal combat equipment in the future; [95421]

(3) if he will take the value of export opportunities for British businesses into account in his assessment of the relative merits of the competing contractors for the Future Integrated Soldier Technology programme; [95425]

(4) what estimate he has made of the potential value of the export market for Future Integrated Soldier Technology equipment systems and sub-systems over the next 20 years; [95424]

(5) what the value is of (a) the next assessment phase and (b) the demonstration and manufacture phases of the Future Integrated Soldier Technology programme. [95422]

Mr. Ingram: The Future Integrated Soldier Technology (FIST) programme will bring the benefits of technology improvements to the infantry soldier by providing an integrated suite of equipment which will enhance mission effectiveness in dismounted close combat. An announcement on the Prime Contractor for the Assessment Phase (AP) of the FIST programme will be made shortly.

Expenditure of up to £30 million is anticipated during AP. Demonstration and Manufacture costs are expected to be up to around £800 million dependent on the precise configuration of the suite of equipment identified during the AP. The cost and scope of work to be performed will be more closely defined during the AP.

Evaluation of the competing proposals will be based on a number of criteria. Both bids are based on the same level of funding in the AP so price will not be a discriminator, and technical specifications will only be developed as a product from the AP. Selection will be informed by assessments of the bidders' planning and scheduling proposals, their proposals on technology exploitation during AP, their preparedness to engage in effective partnering arrangements, and their acceptance of contractual terms and conditions.

Wider factors, consistent with our Defence Industrial Policy will also be considered including potential export value to the United Kingdom defence industrial base. Current analysis of the potential export market suggests opportunities in the region of £3 billion over 15 years.

Gas Masks

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Service personnel have been supplied with gas mask filters that are out of date; and if he will make a statement. [96930]

Mr. Ingram: To the best of our knowledge, no Service personnel have been issued with gas mask filters which are out of date, and no defect reports have been received from units about either respirators or respirator filters. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 11 February 2003, Official Report, column 633W.

HMS Nottingham

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 28 January 2003, Official Report, column 747W, on HMS Nottingham, what changes to current departmental expenditure commitments he plans to make. [96893]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 11 February 2003, Official Report, column 635W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Vauxhall (Kate Hoey).

Landing Ship Dock Auxiliary Vessels

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects construction to be completed on the new Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary) vessels (LSD (A)). [95417]

Mr. Ingram: Construction of the first Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary), RFA LARGS BAY, is due to complete in March 2004. The vessel will then undergo a series of sea trials prior to its acceptance into service in autumn 2004. Construction of the remaining three vessels is planned to complete during 2004 and 2005, followed by sea trials and acceptance into service.

Medical Discharge (RAF)

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances an RAF employee can be asked to forfeit his entitlement to medical discharge. [97511]

Dr. Moonie: RAF Personnel do not have an entitlement, either statutory or regulational, to medical discharge.

The discharge of personnel below the minimum Royal Air Force medicalstandard is decided at the Personnel Management Agency, following consideration of an individual's case by a Medical Board. The individual is invited to provide a personal statement as part of this process.

Merlin Helicopter

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Merlin helicopters are grounded in order to provide spare parts for operational Merlin helicopters. [96942]

Mr. Ingram: The term 'grounded' is normally used only when a whole fleet or mark of aircraft is identified as unsafe to fly because of specific serious engineering or airworthiness problems which call into question the safety of the aircraft type. No Merlin helicopters are being used to provide spares for operational aircraft.

Middle East (Equipment Suitability)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the (a) quality and (b) suitability for the climate and conditions of the equipment supplied to army personnel in preparation for deployment to the middle east. [96663]

Mr. Ingram: All our troops are provided with personal equipment that is right for the operation to be undertaken. The clothing, boots and other personal equipment that is provided to each soldier has been tested, and procured to a high quality and reliability standard. The views of soldiers are taken into account during this process. We hold stocks of all types of personal equipment for the variety of operations that might occur but, because it is not sensible to tie up assets for all contingencies, these basic stocks are supplemented as operations become better defined. Adequate stocks of desert equipment for Army personnel will be available for Operation Telic.

Naval Complement

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) Royal Navy and (b) Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels available for sale to foreign navies. [95889]

Mr. Ingram: The only Royal Navy vessel available for sale at present to foreign Governments is HMS Sheffield. There are no Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels available for sale to foreign navies at present.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to order (a) a primary casualty receiving ship for the Royal Navy and (b) additional tankers for the Royal Fleet Auxiliary services. [95892]

Mr. Ingram: Initial Gate approval for procurement of a Primary Casualty Receiving Capability (PCRC) was granted on 20 December 2001. A contract was awarded to BMT Defence Services on 21 December 2001 for support in determining the size and shape of an afloat medical facility that would meet our needs and to establish which ship types could potentially become host platforms. In parallel, the PCRC Integrated Project Team (IPT) is considering which procurement options are likely to prove most cost effective. It is anticipated that tendering for the demonstration and manufacture phase of the project should take place during 2003–04. The In Service Date will depend upon the final technical specification and procurement route selected but should be towards the end of the decade.

Following the expected entry into service of the Auxiliary Oilers RFA Wave Knight and RFA Wave Ruler, which should occur in early spring this year, we plan to acquire future afloat support capability, including that currently provided by Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels, as part of our larger afloat support strategy.

Currently, the Defence Procurement Agency's Military Afloat Reach and Sustainability (MARS) project is investigating these future afloat support needs and the most flexible and cost-effective means of meeting them. Although the programme is at an early stage, initial reactions have been received following an industry day, which was held in October 2002, and we will be seeking innovative and cost effective proposals from industry as it progresses.

Nuclear-Powered Submarines

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the eventual disposal of the hulks of paid-off SSNs and former Polaris submarines. [95884]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 12 December 2002, Official Report, column 423W by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Dr Moonie). Since then approval has been given for the Isolus project to enter an assessment phase, and we are now seeking outline proposals from industry for the interim storage of radioactive material from the decommissioned submarines. Over 30 companies have expressed an interest in the work and an industry briefing day is to be held in late February.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the locations of each paid-off SSN and former Polaris submarine. [95886]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence (Dr. Moonie) on 12 December 2002, Official Report, column 423W. In addition, HMS Dreadnought, the former Polaris submarine that was decommissioned in 1983 is stored safely afloat at the Rosyth Dockyard.

Ptarmigan

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the completion of the Ptarmigan upgrades. [95189]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence is committed to sustaining the Ptarmigan trunk communication system for land forces and continues to keep the system available at high readiness for any potential operations. To enable Ptarmigan to cope with increasing demands placed on it, two planned enhancements were completed in 2002. One will enable Ptarmigan to connect to future systems such as Bowman. The other allows more rapid and flexible deployment of some of the more mobile components of Ptarmigan. We are currently making minor modifications to the Ptarmigan system to enable it to be used more effectively in the context of potential operations. I am withholding specific details under Exemption 1 (Defence, security and international relations) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Royal Air Force

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when 5 Squadron will be disbanded; and to which squadrons 5 Squadron personnel will be re-assigned. [96929]

Mr. Ingram: 5 Squadron disbanded on 30 September 2002. Personnel were assigned to the following Squadrons:

1 Squadron Cottesmore;

3 Squadron Cottesmore;

4 Squadron Cottesmore;

9 Squadron Marham;

11 Squadron Leeming;

20 Squadron Wittering;

25 Squadron Leeming;

31 Squadron Marham;

43 Squadron Leuchars;

54 Squadron Coltishall;

56 Squadron Coningsby/Leuchars;

111 Squadron Leuchars;

230 Squadron Aldergrove; and 617 Squadron Lossiemouth.

In addition, some personnel were not assigned to a new Squadron but were posted to other branches and headquarters in the Ministry of Defence.

SA80/L86A2 Weapons

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many SA80 L86A2 weapons will be withdrawn from operational service following the introduction into service of the new light machine gun; and if he will make a statement. [97190]

Mr. Ingram: No SA80 L86A2 weapons will be withdrawn from operational service following the introduction into service of the new light machine gun.

Satellite Communications Systems

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on satellite communications systems; and what increases he plans to these capabilities. [95412]

Mr. Ingram: Military satellite communications are currently provided by the SKYNET 4 system, supplemented as necessary by commercial satellite systems and the use of satellite communications systems operated by Allies. SKYNET 4 will reach the end of its operationally useful life later this decade and we are seeking to continue and update our capability through the SKYNET 5 service provision contract currently being negotiated with Paradigm Secure Communications. The SKYNET 5 contract will include modernisation of satellite ground terminals.

We expect SKYNET 5 to introduce, from the middle of the decade, enhanced voice and data services with better resilience together with improved flexibility to support remote, mobile operations. It will make an important contribution to our aim of developing network enabled capability. The improvements will be introduced progressively and support to existing systems will be maintained as required during transition to SKYNET 5.

Sea King Helicopters

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the planned disposal of seven Sea King MK6 helicopters. [94575]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 5 December 2002, Official Report, column 933W. One Sea King Mk 6 helicopter has been designated as scrap. No final decision has yet been made concerning plans for six other Sea King Mk 6 helicopters.

Target Locator Systems

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects the laser target locator systems to enter service (a) with the Royal Artillery forward observers and (b) as part of the enhancements to the Warrior armoured infantry fighting vehicle and the CVR(T) reconnaissance fleets; [95186]

(2) when he expects the new laser rangefinders to enter service; and if they will be within the Ministry of Defence's estimated budget. [95411]

Mr. Ingram: The laser target locator systems for Royal Artillery (RA) forward observers are expected to enter service by the end of March 2003. This system is intended to be operated whilst the observer is dismounted. The equipment will be issued to RA forward observers operating from Warrior OPV, Saxon or in the dismounted role. The project is within the estimated budget.

The separate programme providing laser target locator systems as part of the enhancement of the Warrior Armoured Infantry Fighting Vehicle and CVR(T) reconnaissance fleets, will be rolled out between 2004 and 2006. The RA variant of Warrior and some Scimitar CVR(T) vehicles already have this capability. This project is also within the estimated budget.

Territorial Army

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Territorial Army centres in Lancashire are providing reservists to UK forces; and how many reservists from the Territorial Army Centre in Chorley have been called to join UK forces. [96741]

Dr. Moonie: The following Territorial Army Centres in Lancashire are providing reservists as a result of recent mobilisation orders:

Territorial army centre	Location
B Company, Lancastrian and Cumbrian Volunteers	Moss street, Blackburn
B Squadron, 207 Field Hospital (Volunteers)	Canterbury street, Blackburn
Detachment C Squadron, 208 Field Hospital (Volunteers)	Caton road, Lancaster
Detachment E (14) Evacuation Squadron, 5 GS Medical Regiment	Devonshire road, Chorley, Preston
Detachment 29 Company, 3 (Volunteer) Military Intelligence Battalion	Devonshire road, Chorley, Preston

As at Friday 7 February, the following numbers of reservists from the Territorial Army Centre at Chorley have been called up for mobilisation:

Territorial army centre	Number of reservists
Detachment E (14) Evacuation Squadron, 5 GS Medical Regiment	14
Detachment 29 Company, 3 (Volunteer) Military Intelligence Battalion	6

Typhoon (Meteor Missile)

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what interim measures have been put in place in advance of the air defence Meteor missile entering service with the Typhoon fighters; [95419]

(2) when he expects the new air defence Meteor missile to enter service with the Typhoon fighters. [95418]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence intends to procure the Advanced Medium Range Air to Air Missile from the USA to equip Typhoon until Meteor enters service in 2012.

Wheeled Tanker

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the new wheeled tankers for the armed forces to enter service; and if he expects this to remain within the Ministry of Defence's proposed budget. [95415]

Mr. Ingram: The wheeled tankers are expected to enter service in 2004 within the approved cost and timescale.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Energy

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been paid to consultants engaged by her Department to assess the financial situation of British Energy; and if she will list the consultants engaged to conduct this work since September 2002. [96989]

Mr. Wilson: At end-January 2003, the Department had been invoiced for or paid around £9.8 million to its advisers in respect of their work on the financial situation of British Energy. The Department has engaged the following advisers:

Credit Suisse First Boston—financial adviser
Deloitte and Touche—accountancy adviser
Slaughter and May—legal adviser
McGrigor Donald—Scottish legal adviser
Stikeman Elliott—Canadian legal adviser
Crowell Moring—US legal adviser
Mr Christopher Knight—independent financial adviser

Chemical Sales (Israel)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which chemicals with potential military and civil dual-use capabilities the United Kingdom has licensed for sale to Israel; and what steps have been taken to ensure these chemicals have not been put to military use. [96987]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 10 February 2003]: Details of all export licences are published by destination in the Government's Annual Reports on Strategic Export Controls; copies of which are available from the Libraries of the House.

The Government has made clear its commitment to effective monitoring of the end-use of UK defence exports where this can make a genuine contribution to preventing their diversion or misuse. However, follow-up monitoring can only confirm if UK exports have been misused or diverted after the export has taken place. The Government believes that the most effective way to prevent misuse or diversion of UK defence exports is by rigorous assessment at the export licensing stage. To this end we have taken a number of steps to strengthen end-user risk assessment in the export licensing process. Before taking a decision on an export licence application, the Government takes into account all reliable information about end-users of potential concern, including reporting from other Government Departments and UK posts overseas, and also from any relevant information received from non-governmental organisations and other external sources. Overseas posts have standing instructions to report any misuse of UK-origin defence equipment so that it can be taken into account in the licensing process.

Coal Reserves

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates she has made of the total coal reserves available in the (a) United Kingdom and (b) Wales. [96270]

Mr. Wilson: The Coal Authority has (in consultation with the industry) estimated that established reserves workable by either opencast or deep-mining methods in Britain total some 222 million tonnes with a further known potential of 380 million tonnes. The extent to which thee tonnages are available is influenced by a range of factors, not least operators' ability to mine the coal safely and economically and to secure the necessary consents to do so. No separate figures are available for Wales.

In addition, the Department recently commissioned a report which examined coal reserves and resources accessible from remaining deep mines (excluding the Selby Complex scheduled to close in March 2004). Total reserve and resources was estimated to be in the order of 150m tonnes, 14m tonnes of which is in Wales. The report, produced by IMC Group Consulting Limited, is shortly to be published on the DTI Website.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on responsibility for the appointment of the Chairman and Deputy Chairman of the Financial Reporting Council. [97385]

Ms Hewitt: The constitution of the Financial Reporting Council (FRC) provides that the Chairman and Deputy Chairmen of the FRC are appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Governor of the Bank of England acting jointly.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she intends to take against the companies listed in the Iraqi submission to the United Nations Security Council in its weapons programmes, as military equipment and services suppliers to Iraq. [95898]

Mr. Wilson: Any listing in the Iraqi submission would not in itself imply there has been a breach of UK export controls. Any allegations that there has been a breach of UK export controls would require careful examination by HM Customs and Excise, which is responsible for the enforcement of UK export controls.

Mains Gas Network

Matthew Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to extend the national mains gas network. [94946]

Mr. Wilson: The Government has encouraged the development of the mains gas network by stimulating competition and reducing connection costs. It continues to work with industry and other interested parties to seek ways in which to assist the fuel poor in non-gas areas.

Miners' Compensation

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the miners' respiratory compensation settlements are for chronic bronchitis only; how many cases that have been settled have been paid; and how many claims registered in (a) 1998 and (b) 1999 (i) have been finalised and (ii) are outstanding. [96269]

Mr. Wilson: As of 2 February 2003, IRISC, the Department's claims handlers, had made over 28,000 full and finals offers for chronic bronchitis only, this out of a total of nearly 58,500 full and final offers. Nearly 23,000 chronic bronchitis only offers have been accepted and have received payment in settlement of their claim, and around 5,000 offers remain under consideration with solicitors.

In 1998 IRISC registered nearly 53,500 claims for respiratory disease. As at 29 January 2003, 22,800 had been settled in full.

In 1999 IRISC registered nearly 29,500 claims for respiratory disease. As at 29 January 2003, 10,704 had been settled in full.

Claims are processed in order of priority points, as set out in the Claims Handling Agreement, not by date of claim.

Miners' Pension Fund

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value of the Miners' Pension Fund was in each year since the year before it was supported by Government finance, to 2003; and what bonuses have been paid out in each of these years. [96761]

Mr. Wilson: The market value of the Mineworkers' Pension Scheme fund as at 30 September for each year since 1993, is as follows:

£million

Year	Market Value of Fund
1993	7,528
1994	7,763
1995	8,582
1996	9,389
1997	10,988
1998	10,394
1999	12,423
2000	14,220
2001	11,521
2002	9,774

Bonuses under the arrangements introduced at privatisation first became payable in 1997 and are as follows:

£million

Year	Bonus Payments made
1997	23
1998	69
1999	76
2000	82
2001	119
2002	127

OECD Bribery Convention

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the policy of the Department is on incorporation of the OECD Convention on Bribery; and if she will make a statement. [96817]

Mr. Wilson: The Government is fully supportive of this Convention and views it as a minimum standard to be attained.

In February 2002 the Anti-Terrorism Crime and Security (ATCS) Act came into effect. Part 12 of the Act puts beyond doubt that the law of bribery applies to acts involving foreign office holders, including Ministers, MPs and judges, and takes jurisdiction over crimes of bribery committed by UK nationals and UK companies overseas. Previously some part of the offence had to take place in the UK.

The measures outlaw acts of bribery by UK nationals and companies abroad in the same circumstances as they are outlawed at home. This extraterritoriality goes beyond the specific requirements of the OECD Convention and demonstrates the seriousness of the Government's commitment to reduce bribery in international business.

Plutonium

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the risk of terrorists (a) intercepting and (b) stealing plutonium in transit by sea from Sellafield to (i) Japan, (ii) European Union member states and (iii) Switzerland. [96988]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 10 February 2002]: The Department of Trade and Industry's Office for Civil Nuclear Security (OCNS) is responsible for regulating civil nuclear security in the UK including security of transport of nuclear material. The security standards, procedures and specific arrangements reflect published guidance issued by the IAEA. Security precautions for the transportation of nuclear material are kept under regular review. However, it is not Government policy to disclose details of security measures taken in connection with the transportation of nuclear material.

In respect of transports of MOX, OCNS has confirmed that the extensive security arrangements in place both for transports of MOX carried out between the UK and countries in Europe and those undertaken by UK operators between Europe and Japan are amply robust to deal with any potential threats. This matter has been reviewed in the context of the terrorist attacks that took place in September 2001 and the circumstances arising since then.

Roof Contracting Industry (Insurance Cover)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions officials from her Department have had with representatives of the roof contracting industry regarding the availability of insurance cover; and if she will make a statement. [96897]

Mr. Wilson: A number of meetings have taken place at official level with representatives of the roofing contractors industry and other construction industry sectors about the availability of insurance cover.

A study is being undertaken by the Construction Sector Unit to establish the extent and nature of the difficulties contractors face in obtaining a range of different types of insurance; to obtain a clearer understanding of the reasons for the problems; and how the industry could better represent its approach to risk assessment, management and control to the insurance industry. The National Federation of Roofing Contractors has participated in this study.

The Government is also keen to have the views of all affected industries, including building, construction and roofing, on the review of the Employer's Liability Compulsory Insurance (ELCI) scheme.All written contributions should be sent to: ELCI Review Team, Department of Work and Pensions, The Adelphi, Level 2, 1- 11 John Adam Street, London, WC2N 6HT or by e-mail to bob.elam@xlwp.gsi.gov.uk

Small Businesses

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her Answer of 8th January, Official Report, column 248W, on small retail businesses, how many enterprises there are in the UK of all sizes. [97574]

Mr. Wilson: In the UK at the start of 2001 there were an estimated 3,746,370 businesses in the private sector and public corporations.

Wind Farms

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) off-shore and (b) land-based wind farm projects are under construction; and what the expected completion dates are. [97069]

Mr. Wilson: The Government does not require developers to inform us of when a project will commence construction or when construction is completed. The Government therefore has no details of how many wind farms are under construction or when they will be completed.

TREASURY

AADs

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many accompanying administrative documents AADs for duty-suspended excise goods were in circulation in each year from 1998 to 2002; how many were outstanding in each year from 1998 to 2002; and how many undischarged AADs there are against which assessments have been raised. [97341]

John Healey: The information on the number of accompanying administrative documents is not available. The information on assessments issued against outstanding AADs is not held centrally by Customs and could only be collected at disproportionate cost.

Corporation Tax

Adam Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the effect of a 2 per cent. reduction in the rate of corporation tax would be on tax revenue. [97248]

Dawn Primarolo: Table 5 of the "Tax Ready Reckoner and Tax Reliefs November 2002" shows the direct effects of percentage point changes in each of the starting rate, the small companies' rate and the main rate of corporation tax.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who owns the Customs and Excise headquarters at Custom House, Lower Thames Street, London; how many staff work there and what work they are engaged in; what his estimate is of the market value of the building; and if he will make a statement. [91726]

John Healey: For details of ownership of Custom House, London I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 7 November 2002, Official Report, column 746–50W.

In June 2000 Customs & Excise's valuers estimated the Market Value of Custom House, London at £26.75 million. 850 law enforcement staff work in the building. No details can be given of the work they are engaged in; Exemption 4 (Law enforcement and legal proceedings) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information applies.

Adam Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many members of Customs and Excise's National Investigation Service are suspended pending criminal investigations. [95239]

John Healey: On 1 April 2001 HM Customs and Excise implemented a fundamental restructuring along functional lines creating two core businesses: Business Services and Taxes and Law Enforcement. The National Investigation Service is now part of the Law Enforcement structure. At 12 February 2003 six Officers from the investigation arm of Law Enforcement are suspended pending criminal investigations. All involve allegations of potential gross misconduct, which if proved may result in dismissal.

Duty Diversion Fraud

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the estimated total loss in excise duty due to diversion fraud including frauds not actually investigated is for each year from 1993 to 2002. [97397]

John Healey: Figures are not available in this format for all years. Diversion fraud in the main concerns alcohol products. Estimates of total losses for outward diversion fraud for alcohol in the years 1994–1995 to 1999–2000 were published in the report by John Roques, "The collection of excise duties in HM Customs and Excise", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Estimates for total revenue evaded from all alcohol fraud (including diversion frauds) in the years 1999–2000 and 2000–01 are provided in the HM Customs and Excise document "Measuring indirect tax losses" published with the pre Budget report November 2002, a copy of which is also available in the Library of the House.

ECOFIN

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library the minutes of the meetings of ECOFIN and its associated committees which (a) he and (b) officials from his Department have attended since 1997. [96838]

Ruth Kelly: Minutes of ECOFIN meetings are published on the website of the Council of the European Union: http://register.consilium.eu.int/isoregister/frames/intromnfsEN.htm.

Press notices are accessible at: http://ue.eu.int/newsroom/loadbook.asp?BID=93&LANG=1.

The Treasury Ministers report by written answer on the issues discussed at the ECOFIN meetings and on the position taken by the United Kingdom.

The minutes of ECOFIN's associated committees, (the Economic and Financial Committee and the Economic Policy Committee) attended by senior Treasury officials, are not published.

FTSE 100

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the impact of the fall in the value of the FTSE 100 index on (a) total tax revenues, (b) income tax revenue and (c) corporation tax revenue. [96837]

Ruth Kelly: Consistent with the Code for fiscal stability, an update of projections for the public finances taking into account the effects of changes in share prices will be published in the forthcoming Budget.

Greener Fuels

Bob Spink: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the incentives he has applied to encourage the use of greener fuels are intended to be permanent. [96833]

John Healey: In Budget 2001, the Government reduced the duty rate on road fuel gases to 9p per kilogramme and made a commitment to freeze duty on road fuel gases in real terms until at least 2004.

All other duty rates are reviewed by the Chancellor on a Budget-by-Budget basis, taking into account all relevant economic, social and environmental factors. Fuel duties, as with all other excise duties, are considered as part of the Budget process.

Hospitality Association of Northern Ireland

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether HM Customs and Excise has been repaid the VAT bill by the Hospitality Association of Northern Ireland identified in the inspector's report published by the Northern Ireland Certification Officer. [96655]

John Healey: HM Customs and Excise are statutorily debarred from disclosing information relating to the tax affairs of individuals or companies. Exemption 15 (statutory and other restrictions) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information applies.

Landfill Tax

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what calculation he has made of the impact on jobs of the introduction of the new Landfill Tax Credit Scheme. [97047]

John Healey: The reforms to the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme (LTCS) announced in the 2002 pre-Budget report will involve allocating approximately two-thirds of the funding currently going through the scheme to public spending to encourage sustainable waste management. This reform is intended to deliver a strategic and coherent approach to waste management which, as part of the Government's overall waste strategy, should have a positive impact on the development of waste management industries and related employment in these industries. In order to ensure a smooth transition to the new spending programme, the Government have announced transition funding for waste projects in England which would otherwise have a shortfall between the funding committed through the LTCS and that need to complete planned activity during 2003–04. The Scottish Executive has made a similar announcement regarding projects in Scotland.

London Stock Exchange

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 953W, on the London Stock Exchange, what the level of transactions on the London Stock Exchange was between 1999 and 2002 as measured by value in comparison to other major stock exchanges of the world. [96892]

Ruth Kelly: Following are figures for turnover on leading stock exchanges, taken from the statistics section of the World Federation of Exchanges' website (www.world-exchanges.org). The federation cautions that exchanges use different definitions and calculation methods to compile turnover statistics, so the resulting figures are not necessarily directly comparable.

Annual value of turnover on stock exchanges in domestic currencies

Exchange	1999	2002	Percentage change 1999 to 2002
London Stock Exchange (£ million)	2,106,252	2,657,290	26
NYSE ($ million)	8,945,205	10,311,156	15
NASDAQ ($ million)	10,467,369	7,254,595	-31
Tokyo (yen million)	185,656,910	195,014,915	5
Deutsche Boerse (euro million)	1,472,829	1,279,948	-13
Euronext[1] (euro million)	—	2,097,837	—

[1] The Euronext group of exchanges was created in 2000.

Police Authorities

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to assess the efficiency of police authorities, using the methodology set out in the HMT Public Services Productivity Panel Paper, Improving Police Performance: A New Approach to Measuring Police Efficiency (HMT, April 2000); and if he will make a statement. [95728]

Mr. Denham: The Government announced in the 2002 Spending Review, "2002 Spending Review, New Public Spending Plans 2003–06, July 2002, Cm 5570", that it would publish comparisons of police forces linking resources to performance against key outcomes, including reducing crime and bringing offenders to justice.

The Home Office is moving forward a comprehensive programme designed to assess overall policing performance, called the Policing Performance Assessment Framework.

The approach and methodologies set out in the Her Majesty's Treasury (HMT) Public Services Productivity Panel Paper, "Improving Police Performance: A New Approach to Measuring Police Efficiency (HMT, April 2000)" have been taken into consideration during the development of this programme, which will come to fruition over the next few years.

Basic comparisons of police force performance will be published shortly (in the form of performance radars) and these comparisons will eventually evolve so as to incorporate information on policing efficiency as the Policing Performance Assessment Framework is introduced.

Support Staff

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his Answers of 31st January, (refs. 90981 and 90982), how many support staff there were in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [95938]

John Healey: In 2001–02 approximately 3,800 staff years were allocated to support functions. Figures for 2002–03 are not yet available.

Tobacco Smuggling

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the target market share of smuggled cigarettes was in financial years (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [97026]

John Healey: Customs Public Service Agreement and Service Delivery Agreement for 2001 -2004 set targets for the market share of smuggling cigarettes to be no more than 20 per cent. in 2003–04 and 18 per cent. in 2004–05. Further details can be found in Customs Spring Reports for 2000–2001 and 2002, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Car Service

Norman Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) how many chauffeurs are employed by the Government Car Service; and what the ratio is of chauffeurs to cars held in the car pool; [94990]

(2) what the total mileage as contained in log sheets supplied by Government Car Service drivers is for the most recent month for which figures are available, broken down by Department; [94995]

(3) how many cars there have been in the Government Car Service pool in each year since 1997; who has access to them; and what the average engine size of the cars was in each year since 1997. [94991]

Mr. Alexander: The responsibility for the provision of ministerial cars and drivers has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive, Mr. Nick Matheson, to write to the hon. Member. Copies of his letter will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Departmental Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list consultations his Office has conducted since 1997; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed. [97419]

The Prime Minister: My Office has not published any consultation documents.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Civil Servants (Private Sector Appointments)

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the cases in the last 10 years where senior civil servants have been granted clearance to accept private sector appointments. [96653]

Jane Kennedy: The Northern Ireland Office has granted permission in one case, in the last 10 years, for a senior civil servant to accept a private sector appointment.

Within the Northern Ireland Administration the information sought is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. To compile the necessary information would require scrutiny of the personal files of all current members of the Senior Civil Service and those who have retired or resigned over the last 10 years.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what procedures are in place regarding civil servants from Northern Ireland accepting private sector appointments on their retirement. [96654]

Jane Kennedy: The procedures governing the acceptance of business appointments by civil servants are set out in the Northern Ireland Civil Service Pay and Conditions of Service Code, paragraphs 914–942 and in the Northern Ireland Office staff handbook Guidance on Conditions of Service for HCS chapter 20, page 111–113. These procedures apply to the acceptance of appointments within business and other bodies. These sections of the Code and the staff handbook are currently under review.

I have placed copies of the relevant sections of the staff handbooks referred to in the Library.

Hospitality Association of Northern Ireland

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were (a) formally interviewed, (b) cautioned and (c) charged in relation to the allegation of invoice fraud made in the Certification Officer Inspector's report on the Hospitality Association of Northern Ireland. [96656]

Jane Kennedy: Two persons were formally interviewed under caution by the police in June 1999 in connection with alleged false invoicing. Neither was formally cautioned or charged.

Railways

Mr Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to seek the opinion of an independent railway civil engineer on the cost of upgrading the Lisburn to Antrim railway line before a decision is taken on the closure of the line. [97290]

Angela Smith: An economic and financial appraisal completed in February 2001 by independent consultants ERM, and subsequently independently validated in April 2002 by Halcrow Group Limited, concluded that to upgrade the line so that it could continue to be used for scheduled services and to provide the necessary rolling stock would cost in the region of £18–19million. I have no plans to commission any further studies of these costs.

Mr Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the likely savings from the withdrawal of the Lisburn to Antrim rail service and what plans there are to use the line as an emergency diversionary route. [97291]

Angela Smith: Translink have advised that savings in track maintenance costs arising from the withdrawal of services on the Lisburn to Antrim railway line would amount to £370,000 per annum. Capital expenditure in the order of £18 to £19 million would be required in the medium to long-term to retain services on the line. The line continues to be available as a diversionary route when the main line from Lisburn to Belfast is closed. I intend to make a written statement about the future of services on the Lisburn to Antrim line fairly soon. This statement will cover the issue of the value of the line as a diversionary route.

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to seek the opinion of an independent railway operations expert on the viability of maintaining an enhanced timetable of services on the Lisburn to Antrim railway line before a decision is made on the closure of the line. [97292]

Angela Smith: It is clear that an enhanced timetable of services on the Lisburn to Antrim railway line could only be introduced at the expense of a reduced timetable of services elsewhere on the network, and in particular on the direct line from Antrim to Belfast via Bleach Green junction. Switching more trains to run on the Lisburn to Antrim line would disadvantage more people than it would help. Accordingly, I have no plans to seek the opinion of an independent railway operations expert on the viability of maintaining an enhanced timetable of services on the Lisburn to Antrim railway line.

WALES

Unadopted Sewers

11. Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and the Welsh Assembly Secretaries on the issue of unadopted sewers. [96353]

Mr. Touhig: My right hon. Friend and I have regular discussions with ministerial colleagues and Assembly Secretaries about issues affecting Wales. I understand that Defra and the National Assembly have appointed consultants to undertake research into the extent and condition of existing private drains and sewers in England and Wales.

Air Transport

12. Albert Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with Cabinet colleagues and National Assembly for Wales Secretaries on the development of regional airports and air services in Wales. [96354]

Peter Hain: The Department for Transport and the National Assembly are currently consulting on an air transport strategy for Wales, which recognises the potential of regional airports, including RAF Valley in my hon. Friend's constituency.

Orthopaedic Care (Gwent)

13. Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the First Secretary about the recent report on orthopaedics in Gwent by Professor Edwards. [96355]

Mr. Touhig: I have regular discussions with the Assembly's Minister for Health and Social Services, and the Secretary of State has regular meetings with the First Minister about the provision of health care in Wales. I welcome the report by Professor Edwards into the provision of orthopaedic care in Gwent and have noted with interest the findings and recommendations.

Policing

14. Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what recent discussions he has had with the Chief Constable of North Wales concerning policing matters in Wales. [96356]

Peter Hain: I have regular discussions with the Chief Constables of all four Welsh forces.

Gareth Thomas: What discussions he has had with Cabinet colleagues and National Assembly Secretaries about police funding in Wales. [96357]

Peter Hain: I have discussed the level of police funding with ministerial colleagues and Assembly Ministers. I am pleased that, this year, Welsh forces will receive £355.2 million in grant funding—an increase of 3.6 per cent.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Roger Williams: What discussions he has had with the Lord Chancellor's Department regarding magistrates courts closures in Wales. [96352]

Peter Hain: I have regular discussions with ministerial colleagues about matters affecting Wales, but decisions about the future of individual courts are a matter for local Magistrates' Courts Committees.

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90595]

Peter Hain: All Wales Office staff already earn more than £5.30 an hour. Therefore any increase in the minimum wage by (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) will have no impact on the cost of salaries for the Wales Office.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EU Aid Programmes

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of UK spending on international development in 2002–03 will be spent through European Union programmes; what assessment she has made of the quality and prioritisation of EU aid programmes; what plans she has to re-direct UK spending on international development away from the EU; and if she will make a statement. [95832]

Clare Short: Provisional figures for EC development spending in 2002 indicate that around 25 per cent. of DFID's budget has been spent through European Commission programmes.

The EC development budget particularly for those regions funded from the regular budget, performs poorly compared with other multilateral providers. Some of the EC's programme are of high quality but overall they are not focused on reducing poverty. While quality should improve if the reforms launched in 2000 have the desired impact, procedures are still cumbersome and the process of deconcentration is behind schedule.

Prioritisation needs radical overhaul. Allocation decisions too often reflect the political consensus by the Council of Ministers and European Parliament to maintain spending at historical levels in middle income regions which reflect domestic or foreign policy considerations. These programmes do not generate the institutional reforms these regions require. We want to see the pledge, explicit in the EC's Development Policy Statement of November 2000, to focus on poverty reduction reflected in annual decisions over resource transfers. Given the clear links between poverty and global security the Commission and Member States need to widen the horizon beyond the near abroad and focus scarce grant resources where they can make the most difference in tackling poverty and instability. Provisional figures indicate that in 2001 only 43 per cent. of the EC's budget was spent in the poorest countries. Although an improvement from 38 per cent. in the previous year, we believe the Commission should achieve the target of spending 70 per cent. of the development budget in low income countries by 2006.

EC budget figures are set until 2006. Discussions about the next financial perspectives over the budget for 2007–2013 are at a very early stage, and might be influenced by the outcome of the Convention debate on the future of Europe. There are some key questions: if Commission programmes can be better delivered through national agencies or other multilateral providers, then it is hard to justify their continuation. If the Commission can demonstrate its comparative advantage in terms of effectiveness, impact and outcomes then we should also use it more as a channel for national funds. Unless they can do this, we will seek a reduction in future Commission aid levels. We need to focus their programmes where they can add value, and cut back other activities.

Iain Hook

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what investigations she is carrying out into the death of Iain Hook; and if she will make a statement. [96771]

Clare Short: Her Majesty's Government have insisted on a full investigation by the UN and Israeli Authorities. We have made our concerns clear at the highest levels, and have been assured that the Israeli Defence Force enquiry would be rigorous and comprehensive. We are in close touch with the UN about the investigation they are carrying out. We, and Mr Hook's family, will fully consider the outcome of these investigations when they are made available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Badgers

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been undertaken under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992 in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [95946]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is shown in the table for England and Wales, 1997 to 2001.

Statistics for 2002 will be available in the late autumn of this year.

Number of defendants[1] proceeded against for offences against the Protection of Badgers Act 1992

England and Wales 1997–2001

	Number of defendants proceeded against	Offence description	Statute
1997	44	Offences relating to cruelty to badgers and special protection for badgers and their setts	Protection of Badgers Act 1992 (except section 13)
1998	19
1999	30
2000[2]	21

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.
[2] Staffordshire Police were only able to submit sample data for persons proceeded against at magistrates courts in 2000. Although sufficient to estimate higher orders of data, these data are not robust enough at a detailed level and have been excluded from the table.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Anti-Social Behaviour Orders have been issued in 2002–03 for offenders aged 15 to 18-years-old. [96018]

Mr. Denham: The number of notifications received by the Home Office of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) issued within England and Wales, from 1 January 2002 up to 30 September 2002 (latest available), for persons aged 10 to 17 years is 105. For persons aged 18 years and over the figure is 59. A further 10 ASBOs have been issued within the same period where the age of the recipient has not been given. A more detailed breakdown by age is not available.

We are aware that the numbers of ASBOs made nationally have been consistently under reported in returns made by magistrates courts and are considering how reporting can be improved.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) anti-social behaviour orders, (b) parenting orders and (c) curfew orders have been issued in the City of Leeds in the last three years. [96967]

Mr. Denham: The table shows the number of notifications received by the Home Office of Anti-Social Behaviour Orders (ASBOs) issued within the West Yorkshire Magistrates' Courts Committee (MCCs) area (in which the City of Leeds is situated) and by local government authority up to 30 September 2002 (latest available).

We are aware that the numbers of ASBOs made nationally have been consistently under reported in returns made by magistrates' courts and are considering how reporting can be improved.

Table A: The number of ASBOs as notified to the Home Office, by Magistrates' Courts Committee and local authority area within England and Wales, April 1999 to September 2002

Note:
Between 1 April 1999 to 31 May 2000 data available by police force area (pfa) only

Youth Justice Board (YJB) figures indicate that between April 2000 (when YJB data collection on Parenting Orders started) up to September 2002 (latest available) a total of three Parenting Orders were imposed in Leeds.

Figures from the electronic monitoring contractors indicate that a total of 1,465 Curfew Orders with electronic monitoring were imposed in Leeds during the years 2000 to 2002.

Table B: The number of Curfew Orders imposed in the City of Leeds on juveniles and adults for the years 2000 to 2002

Year	Number of orders
Juvenile Curfew Orders (aged 10–15)
2000	0
2001	16
2002	41
Total	57
Adult Curfew Orders (aged 16+)
2000	431
2001	368
2002	609
Total	1,408

No applications have yet been received to establish a local child curfew scheme under section 14 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. Some local authorities and police forces have considered the possibility but concluded that other measures should be taken to tackle relevant local problems.

Settlement Applications

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the countries from which people have come who have applied for settlement in the last five years; and what percentage of applications was refused. [95999]

Beverley Hughes: The available statistics are given in the following table.

The information relates to decisions on applications for settlement by main nationality. The latest available data are for 2001. Data for 2002 will be published later this year.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 30 January 2003, Official Report, column 1035W, on Afghan asylum claims, how many Afghan refugees granted asylum have claimed that they fought for the Taliban but (a) that they did not support the Taliban and (b) that they were coerced. [96529]

Beverley Hughes: We are under no obligation to give refuge to terrorists or anybody else who poses a threat to the United Kingdom's national security, such as Taliban fighters. As a result of media speculation, the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) has reviewed all Afghan applicants granted asylum who applied since 1 October 2001, shortly before the fall of the Taliban.

No cases were found of people granted asylum because they were committed to the Taliban regime and feared persecution from the new government. There were three who gave credible accounts of being opposed to the Taliban but having been forcibly conscripted by them. All three claimed to have escaped when an opportunity presented itself and none was engaged in direct combat with British or US ground forces.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the use of (a) chartered and (b) military flights for the deportation of failed asylum claimants. [96530]

Beverley Hughes: The use of charter flights is a means of removing large numbers of failed asylum seekers and other immigration offenders when there is no availability of seats on scheduled aircraft.

They are also used for removals to destinations that carriers from the United Kingdom currently do not operate to, eg Kosovo.

Charter flights have been used to remove large numbers of failed asylum seekers since March 2001. During the current financial year over 2000 failed asylum seekers have been removed on such flights.

Military flights are not used for the removal of failed asylum seekers at this time.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accommodation and property companies he has commissioned to find properties with planning permission for use as hostels for the accommodation of asylum seekers; where properties selected for such use are located; what costs have been incurred by the Home Office in connection with such properties; what the anticipated (a) capital and (b) revenue costs are; what consultations have taken place with (i) hon. Members and (ii) other bodies; and if he will make a statement. [92878]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 January 2003]: The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) is currently conducting a procurement exercise for the provision of accommodation to support the Induction Centre for London and the south east which will include consultation with relevant local stakeholders as part of this procurement process.

NASS is also considering proposals for short term emergency accommodation in the regions. If contracts are entered into, this accommodation will be used until the national network of induction centres is established.

Broadband Access

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of (a) police forces and (b) probation services have broadband access; and what targets have been set for full broadband access in each case. [95743]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 February 2003]: All police forces have access to a secure, high capacity Internet connection via the Criminal Justice Extranet (CJX), which provides secure messaging, information and document exchange and user directories for the police forces.

The CJX provides forces with access to the Internet and there are no additional plans or targets to introduce separate broadband access.

Many Probation Areas have Internet access via stand-alone PC's. It is not known what proportion of these have broadband access and no targets have been set for the provision of broadband access.

Burnley Riots

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the costs of policing the disturbances in Burnley in 2001 were. [96597]

Mr. Denham: I understand from the Chief Constable (Mr Paul Stephenson QPM) that the additional costs of policing the disturbances was 1.3million. On 30 January 2002 we announced a special grant of £820,000. This grant met 64 per cent. of the additional costs incurred by the force.

Child Protection

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full-time police officers are assigned to child protection departments in each constabulary in England and Wales. [96023]

Mr. Denham: Information is not collected centrally on the number of police officers deployed to child protection duties. The allocation of resources within a force is decided locally by the Chief Constable or, in the case of the Metropolitan Police Service, the Commissioner. Under the National Policing Plan all forces and authorities are expected to review their force policy and local service plans to ensure that child protection is given the appropriate priority.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to raise the priority level of child protection policing in policing plans. [96024]

Mr. Denham: The National Policing Plan (NPP) specifically asks all police forces and authorities to review their force policy and local policing plans to ensure that child protection is given the appropriate priority.

Police forces and authorities are required to take into account the contents of the NPP when preparing their local annual and three-year policing plans. Guidance on three-year plans has been issued, and asks forces and authorities to submit their three-year plans to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary by 31 March 2003.

Closed Circuit Television

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research studies he has commissioned on the efficacy of CCTV in reducing crime; and what the results were. [96762]

Mr. Denham: Under the Crime Reduction Programme CCTV Initiative around £170 million will be spent between 1998 and 2003 funding 684 CCTV schemes. More than 550 of these schemes are already fully operational, with further schemes coming on line weekly.

As a condition of funding, each scheme is required to undertake an independent evaluation of its effectiveness as a tool to assist the police and reduce crime and the fear of crime. These evaluations will cover implementation, impact and cost effectiveness. In addition, to help ensure maximum impact and sustainability of CCTV, a £1.5 million Home Office funded national evaluation programme is being carried out by the Scarman Centre, University of Leicester, on 17 approved CCTV initiative schemes. The final report will not be published until 2004 but interim reports will be available before then. The first—providing guidance for practitioners on implementation of CCTV schemes—is due for publication shortly.

Crime Data

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the links between crime levels and (a) poverty, (b) income inequality, (c) legal drug abuse, (d) illegal use of drugs and (e) family break-up; and if he will make a statement. [95724]

Mr. Denham: The British Crime Survey (BCS) 2001–02 provides information on victims of crime and includes statistics on risks of crime by household type for burglary (table 4.03), vehicle thefts (table 5.04) and violent crime (6.02). Figures are broken down into categories which include household income, employment status and area type. More detailed analysis of the risks of burglary, based on the 1998 BCS, was published in 1999. This analysis did not show an independent link between risk of burglary victimisation and household income. The BCS 2001–02 also published risks by types of neighbourhood. This showed that people living in the more deprived 'striving areas' tended to experience higher risks generally, although there was also an increased risk in 'rising areas', such as affluent urban areas.

In terms of offending, poverty has been identified as one of the potential risk factors associated with offending. For example, a study of working class boys found that a combination of low income, poor housing and large family size consistently identified an increased risk of self-reported offending, criminal convictions and both juvenile and adult offending (Farrington 1992b and 1992c).

The new English and Welsh Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (NEW-ADAM) research programme, which involves interviewing and drug testing adults arrested by the police, confirms a link between drug misuse and crime. Analysis on the links between crime, family background and drug use is published in the 1998–99 Youth Lifestyles Survey. This examined the extent to which various factors were associated with offending among young people aged 12 to 30. Figures show, for example, that young people who lived in a lone parent or a step parent family were more likely to be serious or persistent offenders than those who lived with their natural parents. However, persistent, serious conflict between parents, or between a parent and a child, appears to be more important, in this respect, than family structure. While some structures—notably lone parent families—are correlated with an increased risk that children will offend, the evidence suggests that this is a product of factors that also affect children in two-parent families. Drug users were also more likely to be serious or persistent offenders than non-drug users.

In the spring we intend to publish a series of reports on the relationship between binge-drinking by young people and offending. Work is also being undertaken on a literature review on the relationship between alcohol and violence.

Crime Statistics (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown of crime statistics for (a) Hertsmere and (b) Hertfordshire for each year since 1997, including the most recent figures available. [96948]

Mr. Denham: The number of offences recorded in the Hertsmere Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership (CDRP), and the Hertfordshire police force area for the years requested are given in the table.

Currently, six key offence groups are recorded and published at Crime and Disorder Partnership level. Data have been collected at this level since 1 April 1999. All main offence groups are collected at police force area level.

There was a change in counting rules for recorded crime on 1 April 1998, which would have the tendency to increase the number of offences counted. Numbers of offences before and after this date are therefore not directly comparable.

Table A—Number of recorded offences in Hertsmere Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnership.

Cruelty to Animals

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had about the possible linkages between cruelty to animals and offences against the person. [96148]

Mr. Denham: The Department has not held recent discussions on the possible linkages between cruelty to animals and offences against the person, however, the Department is aware of the current external debates on this issue.

Drug-related Crime

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the percentage of crime related to drug use in (a) rural areas and (b) the Eastern region of the United Kingdom. [97593]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Recorded crime figures include statistics on drugs offences, such as possession, and on acquisitive crimes, such as burglary, but do not record whether the latter are related to an offender's drug habits.

However, the New English and Welsh Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (NEW-ADAM) research programme, which involves interviewing and drug testing those arrested by the police, confirms a link between drug misuse and crime, although the conclusions do not relate specifically to rural areas or the Eastern region of the United Kingdom. Analysis of the data from the first eight sites in the survey, collected during 1999–2000, shows that 65 per cent. of arrestees provided a urine sample that tested positive for one or more illegal drug.

The analysis also shows that up to 29 per cent. of arrestees tested positive for opiates (including heroin) and/or cocaine (including crack).

As a guide to the proportion of crime that is drug-related, analysis of the NEW-ADAM self-report data indicates that while only 21 per cent. of non-drug using arrestees reported having previously offended in the past 12 months, this figure rises to 75 per cent. for those arrestees who use heroin and/or cocaine/crack. Moreover, while users of both heroin and cocaine/crack represented just under one quarter of all arrestees interviewed, they were responsible for more than three fifths of all the illegal income reported.

In support of this, 55 per cent. of arrestees who reported using one or more drugs in the last 12 months and committing one or more acquisitive crimes, acknowledged a link between their drug use and their offending behaviour. This proportion rose to 78 per cent. for arrestees who said they had used heroin and cocaine/crack.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of crime in the (a) Leeds West constituency and (b) the city of Leeds was deemed to be drug related in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [96974]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Recorded crime figures include statistics on drugs offences, such as possession, and on acquisitive crimes, such as burglary, but do not record whether the latter are related to an offender's drug habits.

Drug-related Crime (Portsmouth, South)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of crime in the Portsmouth, South constituency was deemed to be drug-related in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [97280]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Recorded crime figures include statistics on drugs offences, such as possession, and on acquisitive crimes, such as burglary, but do not record whether the latter are related to an offender's drug habits.

However, the New English and Welsh Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (NEW-ADAM) research programme, which involves interviewing and drug testing those arrested by the police, confirms a link between drug misuse and crime, although the conclusions do not relate specifically to Portsmouth. Analysis of the data from the first eight sites in the survey, collected during 1999–2000, shows that 65 per cent. of arrestees provided a urine sample that tested positive for one or more illegal drug. The analysis also shows that up to 29 per cent. of arrestees tested positive for opiates (including heroin) and/or cocaine (including crack).

As a guide to the proportion of crime that is drug-related, analysis of the NEW-ADAM self-report data indicate that while only 21 per cent. of non-drug using arrestees reported having previously offended in the past 12 months, this figure rises to 75 per cent. for those arrestees who use heroin and/or cocaine/crack. Moreover, whilst users of both heroin and cocaine/crack represented just under one quarter of all arrestees interviewed, they were responsible for more than three fifths of all the illegal income reported.

In support of this, 55 per cent. of arrestees who reported using one or more drugs in the last 12 months and committing one or more acquisitive crimes, acknowledged a link between their drug use and their offending behaviour. This proportion rose to 78 per cent. for arrestees who said they had used heroin and cocaine/crack.

Elderly People

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police hours were spent by the Metropolitan Police in the last 12 months for which figures are available on searching for elderly people who have wandered or absconded from (a) their homes or (b) places of residence; and what the total cost was of such exercises. [96993]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 11 February 2003]: The Commissioner for Police of the Metropolis informs me that the information sought is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Firearms

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcomes of the UK Gun Summit held on 10 January 2003. [96902]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The discussions which my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary chaired on 10 January allowed the Government, representatives of community groups and the law enforcement authorities to engage together to look for solutions to the problem of people carrying and using guns, and the attitudes and experiences which lead them to do so. The meeting looked widely at legislation and law enforcement issues, at community involvement and at the underlying causes of gun crime. We are pursuing a range of follow up actions designed to take this work forward and to encourage and maintain community involvement. We have announced proposals for legislation and we will be making further proposals for action in the coming weeks.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what co-operation exists between the UK and European police forces to combat illicit firearm trafficking. [96904]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: There is good co-operation between the UK and EU law enforcement agencies in combating illicit firearms trafficking and the UK is represented in a number of international fora aimed at ensuring joint working to combat this threat.

UK law enforcement is active in the Interpol Weapons and Explosives Tracking System (IWETS), the South European Co-operation Initiative (SECI), the United Nations panel of experts for small arms and light weapons tracing and marking (SALW), and the EU Small Arms Policy Committee (SAPC).

UK enforcement agencies have also forged strong bi-lateral links with their European partner agencies in their attempts to tackle the problem of cross border trafficking in small arms and light weapons.

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes involving the use of guns were committed in Staffordshire over the last 12 months for which figures are available; and in which locations. [90152]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 14 January 2003]: There were 116 recorded crimes in Staffordshire in the year ending March 2002 which involved firearms (excluding air weapons). Details of the locations of the offences are not available.

Graffiti

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many successful prosecutions there have been in each of the last 10 years against those who target (a) vehicles and (b) buildings with graffiti. [95661]

Mr. Denham: It is not possible to distinguish offences of graffiti from other types of criminal damage in the Home Office figures for court proceedings as the circumstances of individual offences are not collected centrally.

Greater London Assembly

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial assistance his Department gave to the Greater London Assembly in 2002; and for what projects. [95851]

Mr. Denham: The figures provided are for the financial year 2002–03 and relate to the Greater London Authority.

The Home Office has allocated £1,015,895,687 in police grant to the Metropolitan Police Authority (MPA), which is part of the Greater London Authority. In addition, we are providing the following specific grants to the MPA:

£62 million from the Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) to continue funding for CFF officers recruited in 2000–01 and 2001–02 and for CFF officers to be recruited in 2002–03;

£9.9 million from the DNA Expansion Programme; roughly £20 million towards the cost of police officers' London Allowance;

£2.45 million to meet the cost of free travel for police officers;

an extra £13.1 million from the Street Crime Initiative; an extra £46.3 million to counter terrorism (comprising £34 million for police officers, £8 million for community support officers and £4.3 million for associated counter-terrorism work).

We are also making available to the MPA the following capital resources:

£44.5 million in general capital grant and supplementary credit approvals;

£41 million for "Airwave", the new radio communications system;

£25 million for the Metropolitan Police's Command Control and Communications Information (C3i) System; an extra £1 million for two successful bids from the £20 million Premises Improvement Fund.

Identity Cards

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to the enquiries of the hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey to his private office, when the hon. Member will receive a transcript of the speech he made on identity cards on 15 January. [97416]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 11 February 2003]: A copy of the transcript was sent to the hon. Member's office on 7 February.

Missing Persons

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children (a) ran away from home, (b) were listed as missing and (c) were abducted each year since 1997. [88188]

Mr. Denham: Statistics on the number of children who run away are not collected on a national basis.

Estimates of the scale of the problem have been made in the course of research studies. The most recent, by the Children's Society in 1999[1], drew on a national sample of nearly 13,000 young people. The study found that each year 77,000 young people under the age of 16 in the UK run away overnight. Because many young people run away more than once, this equates to 129,000 running away incidents each year. Details of this study are available in the recent report by the Social Exclusion Unit (2002) 'Young Runaways'.

[1] Safe on the Streets Research Team (1999) Still Running. London: The children's Society

'Children Missing from Care and from Home'—a guide of good practice—was published in tandem with the 'Young Runaways' report. This guidance was issued to every English local authority in November 2002, under Section 7 of the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970. This means that, other than in exceptional circumstances, Councils must follow its advice. This guidance recognises that local authorities, the police, and other agencies (including voluntary sector organisations) need to co-operate at local level to ensure a consistent response to the needs of children who have run away from their homes. The guidance requires that all reported runaways, and those not reported but who self refer, should be offered access to an independent interview upon their return—to identify the reasons for running away and agree an appropriate response.

Statistics are held by the Police National Missing Persons Bureau (PNMPB) on the number of cases where young people remain missing for more than 14 days, or other exceptional cases which are reported before that time. The number of cases recorded since 1997–98 is shown in the table.

	Number of children reported missing
1997–98	938
1998–99	1,184
1999–2000	1,467
2000–01	1,021
2001–02	1,037

Note:
Prior to July 1998 missing persons were not reported to the PNMPB until 28 days after their disappearance.

The Home Office collects statistics from police forces on the number of child abductions committed each year. The offence of 'child abduction' is part of the violence against the person category of recorded crime. It includes both parental and non-parental abductions. The number of offences recorded by the police since 1997–98 is shown in the table.

	Total number of offences of child abduction
1997–98[1]	391
1998–99[2]	502
1999–2000	577
2000–01	546
2001–02	583

Offences of abduction which are sexually motivated will be recorded in the separate abduction category of recorded crime. However, this offence relates both to the abduction of adult and child female victims. It is not possible to dis-aggregate these statistics into child victims only.

Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act

Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the Explanatory Notes for the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002. [97184]

Beverley Hughes: They were published on 6 February 2003.

CS Spray

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces in England and Wales used CS gas operationally in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [95487]

Mr. Denham: I understand from the Association of Chief Police Officers that 40 police forces in England and Wales have access to CS spray. Information on the extent of its use operationally is not collected centrally.

Police Funding

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what figures in the British Crime Survey Recorded Crime Statistics he used to calculate the formula for the allocation of funds to the 30 Basic Command Units. [95988]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 February 2003]: To calculate the formula for the allocation of funds to the 30 Basic Command units (BCU), the data source was Recorded Crime Statistics as published in "Crime in England and Wales 2001/02", a copy of which is in the Library, not British Crime Survey data.

Four crime criteria were used:

Ranking of total acquisitive type crimes by BCU in 2001–02;

Ranking of total acquisitive type crimes per head of the population in the BCU area;

Ranking for total burglary and robbery crimes only per BCD; and Ranking of the percentage increase in acquisitive type crimes 2000–01 to 2001–02.

Acquisitive type crimes were defined for this purpose as burglary, robbery and theft of, and from, vehicles. These types of crimes are most closely associated with drug use.

Police Recruits

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost is of recruiting a police officer; and what the change has been in the level of police grant in Essex from 2001–02 to 2002–03. [93402]

Mr. Denham: The recruitment of police officers is the responsibility of the Chief Officer of each force. No central records are kept of the overall cost of recruiting a police officer.

When rates of payment to be made under the Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) in 2000–01 were agreed with the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Association of Police Authorities, £1,000 was included for recruitment. This payment has been up-rated annually to £1,056 per recruit in 2002–03.

Including CFF, Rural and general grant, Essex received a total allocation of £156.6 million in 2002–03. This was an increase over 2001–02 of 3.9 per cent.

Police Special Branches

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many officers are employed in the Metropolitan Police Special Branch; [96563]

(2) how many officers are employed in Special Branches, including Ports Units, in police forces in England and Wales outside London. [96564]

Mr. Denham: Information collected annually by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary shows that on 31 March 2002 there was a total of 3,463 officers in forces' Special Branches, including 619 ports unit officers. It is not our practice to disclose detail at force level in the interests of national security as to do so could compromise operations.

Police Standards Unit

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 715W, on Police Standards Unit, which initiatives have been aided by the work of the Police Standards Unit. [96191]

Mr. Denham: The Police Standards Unit is supporting a number of initiatives across police forces in England and Wales to improve police performance. The initiatives include sponsoring and sharing good practice to reduce repeat victimisation, vehicle crime, domestic burglary and drug crime; tackling persistent offenders and street crime; aiding the implementation of Automatic Number Plate Recognition (ANPR) and helping forces make the best use of forensic opportunities.

Retail Industry Crime

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 January, Official Report, column 585W, on retail industry crime, when the consultation on the means of creating and maintaining effective partnerships to reduce opportunities for crime against business will report. [96763]

Mr. Denham: The consultation period ends on 28 February 2003. The responses will be collated and analysed over the following eight to 12 weeks and consideration given to the best means of taking business crime reduction partnerships forward. A report should be available by June, and I expect to announce any new arrangements which follow on from the consultation later in the summer.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 14 January 2003, Official Report, column 586W, on small retail businesses, whether the results of the new survey of crime affecting retail and manufacturing business will be (a) published online and (b) placed in the Library. [96766]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced in April last year a new survey of crime affecting retail and manufacturing business. This will give a range of information about the types of crime which most impact on these business sectors and provide insights into the most effective interventions to address them. Results of the survey should be available later this year and will be published both online and placed in the Library.

Splash Programmes

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what funding is available to Splash programmes for (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06, broken down by region; what will be the amount of funding provided by each contributing agency; what will be the amount of funding necessary to run each Splash scheme; and if he will make a statement; [95931]

(2) what measures are being taken to increase youth participation in the Splash programme; and if he will make a statement; [95932]

(3) whether there will be a formal report on the Splash programme of 2002; and if he will make a statement. [95933]

Mr. Denham: In summer 2002 around 370 Splash and Splash Extra schemes were run in high crime areas, enabling over 90,000 young people to take part in a wide range of activities. These schemes contributed to an overall reduction in local crime rates of 5.2 per cent., with reductions of up to 31 per cent. in street crime and robbery in some areas. A full report on the evaluation of the 2002 programme will be published in the spring.

Each Splash Scheme costs £15,000 for a five-week summer programme, including £5,000 from partner agencies, and £6,000 for a two-week Easter programme, including £2,000 from partners.

For 2003, the Government will be launching a new single programme of positive activities for young people to provide year round out of school activities for eight to 19-year-olds. The new programme will absorb Splash and Splash Extra, and will deliver activities to more young people, providing support for those most at risk. The new programme will mean less bureaucracy for local areas, allowing them to focus on delivering good quality programmes to young people at risk of crime and social exclusion. While it is not yet possible to provide a regional breakdown of the funding that will be available, we are planning on each region having an increase compared to last year, with an overall increase in the total budget.

We would hope to sustain this level of activity and funding in subsequent years, but we shall need to review the position in the light of our experience this year.

Surveillance Commissioner

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) authorisations, (b) prior authorisations and (c) renewals of surveillance have been denied by the Surveillance Commissioner (i) in total and (ii) in relation to the Metropolitan Police; and if he will ask the Surveillance Commissioner to report on these matters in future annual reports. [95558]

Mr. Denham: As stated in paragraph 6.10 of the Chief Surveillance Commissioner Annual Report only one authorisation for intrusive surveillance was quashed. This was not a Metropolitan Police case.

Sussex Police

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 116W, on Sussex police, of the 34 officers transferred from Sussex police in the year to 31 March 2002, where they were transferred to. [96013]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally. However I understand from Sussex police that the officers transferred to the forces shown in the table.

Police officers transferred from Sussex Police: 2001–02

To force	Number transferred
Avon and Somerset Constabulary	1
British Transport Police	4
Cambridgeshire Constabulary	2
Cumbria Constabulary	1
Devon and Cornwall Constabulary	3
Dorset Police	2
Dyfed-Powys Police	1
Greater Manchester Police	1
Guernsey Police	1
Hampshire Constabulary	4
Humberside Police	1
Kent County Constabulary	4
Metropolitan Police	6
Nottinghamshire Police	1
West Mercia Constabulary	1
Wiltshire Constabulary	1
Total transfers out of Sussex	34

West Yorkshire Police

Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers West Yorkshire Police employed in (a) 1997 and (b) 2002. [96623]

Mr. Denham: Information about the number of uniformed police officers is not collected centrally. Responsibility for determining police officer numbers in a force rests with the chief constable.

West Yorkshire Police had 5,209 police officers on 31 March 1997 and 4,889 officers on 31 March 2002. The decline in police officer strength in West Yorkshire after March 1997 was much more marked than the overall decline that occurred nationally, despite the force having done a little better than the national average in terms of resources. However, police officer strength in West Yorkshire has been rising since March 2001. In the 12 months to March 2002 force strength increased by 74 officers, I understand that the force expects further substantial growth by March 2003.

The number of civilian support staff in the force has increased since March 1997 by 130 to 2,364 in March 2002.

Wildlife (Illegal Trade)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will include tougher sentences for illegal trade in wildlife in the Criminal Justice Bill; [94943]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on increasing prison sentences for illegal trade in wildlife. [94942]

Hilary Benn: The Government's consultation paper, "Review of the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1991" which was issued on 15 January, recommends an increase in penalties for certain illegal wildlife trade offences. The deadline for responses is 4 April 2003. There are no current plans to include this in the Criminal Justice Bill, but the Government may consider the proposal in the light of amendments tabled.

Working Holiday Visa Scheme

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will include within his current review of the Working Holidaymaker Visa Scheme an assessment of (a) the case for gap year assistant teachers continuing to receive small monetary payments from UK schools including state schools and (b) the benefits to schools of such visas covering more than one calendar year. [97376]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 11 February 2003]: Working Holidaymakers can enter the United Kingdom for a period of up to two years. They are entitled as workers to be paid the national minimum wage or more in the normal way. They may engage in full-time employment for up to 50 per cent. of their stay, and can work in all schools up to the level of junior supply teachers.

The objectives of the review of the Working Holidaymaker scheme are to make it more inclusive, remove unnecessary work restrictions and reduce abuse of the category. We have agreed that the review will include consideration of the particular interests of gap year entrants. An announcement of the outcome of the review will be made in due course.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Archaeological Sites (Cornwall)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the impact of archaeological sites on the tourism industry of Cornwall. [96585]

Dr. Howells: DCMS has not made a formal assessment of the impact of archaeological sites on Cornwall's tourism industry. Nevertheless, the tourist boards recognise the important role that Cornwall's archaeological heritage plays in attracting visitors to the area.

British Writers

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what funding (a) her Department and (b) her Department's agencies provide to support young British writers. [96881]

Dr. Howells: The Arts Council of England, which my Department funds, runs a number of schemes to support young British writers. These schemes total £756,800 in 2002–2003.

Capital Projects

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will place the evaluations for each Capital Modernisation Fund projects in her Department since 1998 in the Library; and if she will make a statement. [97029]

Dr. Howells: As the Department's Capital Modernisation Fund projects have not concluded full evaluation reports are not yet available.

Club Licensing

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the costs for existing licence holders of initial registration under the new licensing system as proposed in the Licensing and Entertainment Bill. [97402]

Dr. Howells: The Government estimate that under the provisions of the Licensing Bill an application for a premises licence will cost between £100 and £500. If an existing licence holder currently has permission to sell alcohol and intends to do so under the new licensing regime they will also have to acquire a personal licence. Existing holders of justices' licences will automatically qualify for a personal licence at a cost of around £30, subject to the right of the chief officer of police to object if they are satisfied that the exceptional circumstances of the case are such that granting the application would undermine the Bill's crime objective.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the projected fees are for (a) a premises licence and (b) a club licensing certificate under the proposed Licensing and Entertainment Bill; and what the expected scale of charges is. [97406]

Dr. Howells: The Government estimate that under the provisions of the Licensing Bill an application for a premises licence or a club premises certificate would cost between £100 and £500 with an annual charge of between £50 and £150 to maintain a revenue stream and cover continuing inspection and enforcement. The Government envisage that fees will be set in bands depending on the size of the premises and are consulting industry, local authorities and others on the precise details of the fee structure.

Computer Misuse

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many laptop computers were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and

(b) officials in her Department in each year since 1995, how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; what their cost was; and if she will make a statement. [97507]

Dr. Howells: At present, one laptop computer is used by a Minister and 80 are used by officials. It is not possible to provide information for previous years.

One laptop computer was stolen last year, one in 2001 and one in 1999. The average value of the stolen equipment was £2,500.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many cases of computer (a) hacking, (b) fraud and (c) theft her Department recorded in 2001–02; and on how many occasions computer systems have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (i) within and (ii) outside her Department. [97555]

Dr. Howells: DCMS did not record any cases of computer hacking or fraud in the period in question. There were four instances of computer theft in 2001 and three in 2002. DCMS has no evidence that any departmental computer systems were illegally accessed by hackers, inside or outside the Department.

Departmental Budgets

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the allocated budgets are for each of her Department's internal directorates in (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06. [97524]

Dr. Howells: The administration cost budgets for the Department's internal directorates for financial years 2003–06 have not yet been allocated. The budgets for 2003–04 will be allocated to internal directorates after the Department's Management Board has reviewed their annual business plans in March.

Departmental Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list consultations her Department has conducted since 1997; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed [97434]

Dr. Howells: The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation, which requires departments to keep a central register of consultations, applies to all formal national consultations from1 January 2001. The information requested before that date is not stored centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Since 2001, the details are as follows:

Title	Opening date for responses	Closing date for responses

E-mail Addresses

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport by what e-mail address members of the public may contact (a) her and (b) each of the Ministers in her Department; and for each e-mail address if she will state (i) the date it became active and (ii) the number of e-mails received in each month since activation. [97460]

Dr. Howells: My colleagues and I can be reached at the following addresses:

tessa.jowell@culture.gsi.gov.uk,

kim.howells@culture.gsi.gov.uk, richard.caborn@culture.gsi.gov.uk, and tessa.blackstone@culture.gsi.gov.uk.

These addresses were set up on the date each Minister was appointed. 11 June 2001 for the first address and 12 June 2001 for the others.

It is not possible to provide a breakdown by month since the activation of each address save at disproportionate cost. However, so far this year each account has received the following number of e-mails.

	January 2003	As of 10 February 2003
Tessa Jowell	109	27
Kim Howells	39	19
Richard Caborn	19	19
Tessa Blackstone	89	26

Entertainment Licences

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate she has made of the number of additional entertainment licences required because of the reform of the two in a bar rule under the Licensing and Entertainment Bill; and what assessment she has made of additional costs. [97472]

Dr. Howells: Under the provisions of the Bill there will be no separate licence for the provision of public entertainment. Permission to carry on any of the activities licensable under the Bill will be covered by a single premises licence. It will cost no more, in terms of time or money, to apply for a licence permitting the sale of alcohol and the provision of entertainment than it would to apply for one permitting the sale of alcohol only.

The Regulatory Impact Assessment that was published alongside the Licensing Bill states that just over 9,000 on-licensed premises and registered members clubs hold permanent public entertainment licences or certificates of suitability. An estimated 37,000 temporary public entertainment licences are also issued each year. The Government have made no estimate of the number of premises that will apply for permission to provide entertainment under the new licensing regime. We expect, however, that the removal of the cost deterrent in applying for permission to provide entertainment, along with the provision of a less bureaucratic system and measures to prevent unnecessary conditions being attached to licences by licensing authorities will encourage many more premises to take the opportunity to provide public entertainment.

European City of Culture

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans are in place to assist the promotion of (a) Cardiff, (b) Liverpool, (c) Newcastle and Gateshead, (d) Oxford, (e) Bristol and (f) Birmingham in their bids to obtain the title of European City of Culture 2008. [97928]

Mr. Caborn: Each of the shortlisted cities will be designated a Centre of Culture. This is a UK only initiative and is not part of the EU's Capital of Culture programme. The Department for Culture, Media and Sport is in consultation with the shortlisted cities to explore ways of developing the designation and maximising its impact and strengthening the UK's position in Europe as a major cultural destination.

The independent advisory panel that recommended the shortlist is now undertaking a further and more intensive programme of assessment of the shortlisted bids before making a final recommendation on the choice of City to go forward as the UK's nomination for European Capital of Culture 2008.

Jarvis plc

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what communications she has had with Jarvis plc regarding the consequences of the design of their new headquarters on the architectural heritage of the Smithfield area of the City of London; [95663]

(2) to what extent her Department has been consulted on the construction work in progress in the Smithfield area of the City of London. [95662]

Dr. Howells: This Department has not been consulted on the construction work in the Smithfield area, and has had no communications with Jarvis Plc on this matter.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent involvement she has had in the oversight of new construction in historically sensitive areas of the City of London. [95664]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State issued a Certificate of Immunity from Listing in respect of Drapers' Gardens, Throgmorton Avenue, London EC2, on 8 January 2003.

National Lottery

Mrs. Betty Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many lottery (a) applications and (b) awards there have been for the Conwy constituency in each year since 1997; and what the national averages were in each year. [96632]

Mr. Caborn: This Department does not hold comprehensive information on lottery applications, in terms of the number of applications made, or the amounts requested on a constituency level.

The following table sets out the awards that have been made in the Conwy constituency since 1997 to date and is broken down by calendar year, along with UK constituency national award averages.

Year	Conwy constituency number of awards	UK constituency national award average
1997	31	22
1998	33	14
1999	47	31
2000	39	37
2001	55	33
2002	50	38

Note:
The figures set out in the table were generated from the Department's National Lottery. Awards Database and the information held is supplied to us from the Lottery Distributors.

Online Sales/Purchases

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what (a) products, (b) goods and (c) services were (i) bought and (ii) sold online by her Department in each of the last five years. [97461]

Dr. Howells: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport achieved the target of 90 per cent. of low value procurement via electronic means. It is not possible to separate the categories of purchases but all stationery, low value office equipment and some low value services are procured either online or through the Government Procurement Card. No sales have taken place online.

Youth Athletics (Wales)

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much direct government funding was given to youth athletics in Wales in (a) 1999, (b) 2000 and (c) 2001. [97107]

Mr. Caborn: This is a devolved matter which is the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Capital Projects

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will place the evaluations for the Capital Modernisation Fund projects relating to (a) national IT strategy, (b) space for sports and arts, (c) school laboratories for the 21st century, (d) wired-up communities, (e) university for industry on-line, (f) new technology institutes, (g) cybrarian, (h) sixth form rationalisation, (i) specialist schools, (j) computers for teachers phase II, (k) HE student support service, (l) SEN communication aids, (m) E-registration, (n) schools management system, (o) ICT for children in care curriculum online, (p) school security from learning to earning, (q) playground renovation and (r) centres of vocational excellence in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [97022]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Projects are at different stages and evaluation reports are not yet available for them all. The following projects are complete and copies of their evaluation reports have been placed in the Library:

National IT strategy

Wired-up communities

University for industry on-line

The project covering children in care is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. The project covering space for sports and arts is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport.

I will place copies of the evaluation reports from this Department's other projects in the Library when they become available. They are also routinely placed on the DfES website.

Child Care

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many applications with regard to (a) childcare workers and (b) premises are awaiting (i) registration and (ii) inspection; and what steps he is taking to process these applications. [87981]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for the Office for Standards in Education (OFSTED). The HM Chief Inspector for Schools, David Bell will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of his letter will be placed in the Library.

Early Years/Sure Start Funding

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his Department's policy in respect of Early Years and Sure Start funding is in relation to funding for (a) Stoke on Trent and (b) Staffordshire; and who will take the lead in developing services. [93160]

Maria Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

Sure Start Unit brings together at a national level responsibility for early education, childcare and health and family support in one, cross-departmental unit. This national change does not, however, alter the existing roles and responsibilities of Local Authorities (including Stoke on Trent and Staffordshire). They retain their significant responsibilities under the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 for early years and childcare. This includes developing local strategic plans for delivery against key government targets for early years and childcare services. Funding is provided to local authorities to enable them to achieve targets and deliver against objectives set out in their plans.

There are also no current plans to change the funding arrangements for Sure Start Local Programmes. Local Authorities will need to take the services provided through such programmes into account in developing their plans.

Early-years Premises

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many early years settings have been (a) required and (b) recommended to upgrade their premises as a result of OFSTED inspections. [93432]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for the Office for Standards in Education (OFSTED). The HM Chief Inspector for Schools, David Bell will write to the hon. Member and a copy of his letter will be placed in the Library.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when young people of Redcar and Cleveland Borough will be able to apply for education maintenance allowances. [96915]

Margaret Hodge: The national Education Maintenance Allowance (EMA) scheme will be available from September 2004 across the whole of England.

In areas such as Redcar and Cleveland, which were not part of the pilot scheme, the first tranche of eligible students will be those who reach the compulsory school leaving age in the 2003–04 academic year.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the cost of the Education Maintenance Allowance in the next (a) year and (b) three years. [95652]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 7 February 2003]: The Education Maintenance Allowance (EMA) scheme will continue to be available in 56 local education authority pilot areas for 2003–04 and planned expenditure for this year is £220.5 million. EMAs will be made available across the whole of England from September 2004 and funding allocated in the latest spending review settlement is £300.5 million for 2004–05 and £470.5 million for 2005–06. The final resources required will depend on the details agreed for the national scheme.

Higher Education

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether it is his target to increase participation in higher education (a) towards and (b) to 50 per cent. of those aged 18 to 30. [94324]

Margaret Hodge: The target is to increase participation in higher education towards 50 per cent. of those aged 18 to 30-years-old by 2010, as measured by the Initial Entry Rate figure.

This measure is based on adding up the percentages of the population in each year group, between the ages of 18 and 30, who enter higher education for the first time.

This target was one of the Public Service Agreements set out during Spending Review 2000 and was confirmed in Spending Review 2002.

St. Bees Village Primary School

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills for what reason restrictions have recently been placed on the number of hours the St Bees Village Primary School After School Club is allowed to open; who took this decision; on what authority it was based; and if he will make a statement. [94284]

Mr. Miliband: In England, regulation of day care for children under the age of eight is the responsibility of the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted). Under Part XA of the Children Act 1989, an after school club must be registered with Ofsted, if care is provided for more than two hours in any day and for more than five days in a year. Schools are exempted from these requirements but there are circumstances in which these exemptions do not apply.

As the regulatory arrangements in this case are a matter for Ofsted, their HM Chief Inspector for Schools, David Bell, will write to my right hon. Friend and a copy of his letter will be placed in the Library.

Student Grants

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of the 30 per cent. of students who it is estimated in the White Paper The Future of Higher Education will qualify for a full grant will be going into full-time higher education at the age of 18. [97170]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 11 January 2003]: I refer my right hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham Selly Oak (Lynne Jones) on 6 February 2003, Official Report, column 358w.

Teaching Quality Academy

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when the consultation period on the establishment of the teaching quality academy will end. [94071]

Margaret Hodge: Consultation is being carried out simultaneously by Universities UK (UUK), the Standing Conference of Principles (SCOP), the Institute for Learning and Teaching in Higher Education (ILTHE) and the Higher Education Staff Development Agency (HESDA). It will be completed by the end of March.

Universities' Revenue

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the estimated total extra revenue is that universities will receive per year following the introduction of deferred top up fees. [96277]

Margaret Hodge: The amount of fee income raised when the new arrangements are introduced will depend on which institutions decide to charge variable fees and at what level, together with the number of students taking those courses.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will estimate the costs of his plans to provide free tuition to students from low-income families. [94753]

Margaret Hodge: For 2002–03, it is costing the Government £477 million to provide tuition fee remission for full-time home and EU students from low-income families at higher education institutions in England and Wales. We intend to continue the present level of fee remission support for students from low-income families.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo on implementing United Nations Security Council Resolution 1457 in respect of ending illegal activities relating to conflict diamonds; and if he will make a statement. [96534]

Mr. Rammell: Officials have had regular contact with the Government of the Democratic Republic of the Congo regarding implementation of the Kimberley Process certification scheme to regulate the international trade in rough diamonds. The DRC is now a participant in the scheme, which we see as the most effective way of dealing with the illicit trade in diamonds—particularly conflict diamonds.

The scheme came into force on 1 January 2003 and the Government of the DRC has reported a substantial increase in the volume of diamonds being channelled through legitimate sources since this date. Successful implementation of the scheme in the DRC is clearly linked to the current peace process.

We will continue to encourage the DRC and others to implement in full. Together with the European Commission, we stand ready to offer technical assistance to achieve that, if asked.

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has received from the United Nations relating to the UN report on illegal resource exploitation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo; what additional investigations in the United Kingdom have been or will be undertaken; and if he will make a statement. [96535]

Mr. Rammell: We take seriously the allegations in the UN Expert Panel report against 12 UK companies. Where there is clear evidence of wrongdoing HMG will consider taking appropriate action. We asked for further information from the UN Expert Panel in November 2002 regarding the allegations. However, the Panel's mandate expired when it submitted its report (i.e. on 18 October 2002) and it was therefore unable to re-start work to produce the information requested until a new mandate had been granted. This was given by UN Security Council Resolution 1457 of 24 January. We are pressing the Panel to provide the information as soon as possible.

Sanctions

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what United Nations, European Union, African Union and other international mechanisms are in place to monitor and enforce sanctions against (a) the Democratic Republic of Congo and (b) Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [96536]

Mr. Rammell: There is an EU arms embargo against the Democratic Republic of Congo, last revised by Common Position 2002/829/CFSP of 21 October 2002.

The EU adopted Common Position 2002/145/CFSP on 18 February 2002 introducing targeted sanctions against Zimbabwe. These measures include an arms embargo, an embargo against items that could be used for internal repression, a travel ban and an asset freeze. These last two measures are targeted against 79 members of the ruling Zanu-PF party.

It is the responsibility of each EU Member State to ensure that they enforce each of these sanctions regimes.

Eritrea/Ethiopia

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Eritrea on following a peaceful settlement to territorial disputes with Ethiopia. [97049]

Mr. Rammell: The European Union resumed the political dialogue with Eritrea under the Cotonou agreement with the signing of a Country Strategy Paper on 14 November 2002. Within this framework, we have had discussions with the Government of Eritrea to discuss the implementation of the 12 December 2000 peace agreement signed in Algiers between Ethiopia and Eritrea. Although there are difficult issues remaining, both sides have given clear assurances that they remain committed to the peace process.

External Consultants

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total cost to his Department was of the use of external consultants in 2002. [90508]

Mr. Rammell: The cost of external consultants in 2001/02 was £20.01 million.

The vast majority of expenditure is associated with our major Information Communications Technology (ICT) and Estate construction programmes. Consultants have also advised on legal, financial and personnel issues and provided support in areas where we have skills shortages. The increase in expenditure compared to 2000–01 is associated with the growth of our ICT programmes.

These figures cover the usual consulting roles eg. for advising on options and feasibility in the initial stages of a project. The figures quoted above exclude the costs of whole projects being implemented by outside consultants eg. Cap Gemini/Ernst and Young who are main contractors for the installation of the PRISM ICT system.

Iain Hook

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what investigations have been put in hand by British police into the death of Iain Hook on 22 November 2002. [96946]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are in close touch with the Suffolk police, who are helping the UK coroner in his investigation into Mr. Hook's death. They will await the outcome of the coroner's investigation before considering any further action.

Kosovo

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Serbs have returned to Kosovo in each month since 1 January 2002. [95547]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 6 February 2003]: United Nations Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) figures indicate that from January to April 2002 inclusive, an average of 72 Serbs returned each month to Kosovo. The figures for the remaining months of 2002 are: May (93), June (56), July (68), August (97), September (206), October (43), November (44), December (27). Figures for returns to Kosovo in January 2003 are not yet available.

Kyrgyzstan

Mr. Peter Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Kyrgyzstan Government to establish relations; and if he will make a statement. [91762]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The British Ambassador, who is resident in Kazakhstan, last met the Kyrgyz Foreign Minister on 28 January. During the meeting he relayed concerns about the timing of a Referendum on Constitutional Reform. Embassy officials pay regular visits to Kyrgyzstan and regularly hold discussions with the Kyrgyz Government. The Department for International Development (DfID) has an office in Kyrgyzstan. My right hon. Friend Secretary of State for International Development plans to visit the country in the next few months.

Pakistan

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 28 January 2003, Official Report, column 768W, on Pakistan, what steps he plans to take as a result of the Government's concerns about the reports of Pakistan's nuclear-related dealings with other countries. [97478]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have for some time taken, and will continue to take, every available opportunity to impress upon Pakistan the need for compliance with the requirements of UN Security Council Resolution 1172. A key requirement of the Resolution is that Pakistan accede to, and abide by the obligations of, the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. We have made our concerns about their nuclear activities clear to Pakistan.

Somaliland

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of Somaliland. [96186]

Mr. Rammell: Somaliland organised successful local elections in December 2002, and will hold presidential and parliamentary elections later this year. Our hope is that these elections will help to bring further stability, prosperity and democracy to Somaliland.

We will monitor developments with keen interest and continue to discuss Somaliland with our partners in the European Union and the United Nations Security Council. We believe it should be for the people of Somalia to decide for themselves on their future.

Sudan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the peace process of the start of conflict in Darfur, Sudan. [97048]

Mr. Rammell: We do not expect the conflict in Darfur to destabilise the Sudan peace process.

UN Counter-Terrorism Committee

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the United Nations Security Council Counter Terrorism Committee since September 2001; what role is played by the United Kingdom in the CTC; and what initiatives have been put forward by the United Kingdom. [96927]

Mr. Rammell: UN Security Council Resolution 1373 requested States to report on the measures taken to implement the resolution and established an ad-hoc Committee of the Security Council, the Counter-Terrorism Committee (CTC) to monitor implementation of the measures imposed. The UK Permanent Representative to the United Nations, Sir Jeremy Greenstock has had the Chair of the CTC since its inception but will relinquish it to the Spanish Permanent Representative in April 2003.

As chair the UK has worked to achieve a CTC which is focused and dynamic. The UK has drawn up work programmes to take forward work in the three key areas: monitoring States' implementation of 1373, facilitating the provision of assistance, and improving international co-operation on counter-terrorism, particularly between international and regional organisations. With this in mind and at UK instigation, the CTC is hosting a meeting with regional and international organisations on 7 March 2003, to look at their possible roles.

Since September 2001, 179 of the 191 member states have submitted one or more reports to the CTC. The CTC is now reviewing these, writing to the States concerned to seek further information where necessary, and will be working closely with the 13 states which have yet to submit a report.

UN Resolutions (Israel)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the resolutions passed by the (a) United Nations General Assembly and (b) United Nations Security Council in respect of Israel, which Israel to date has not complied with; and if he will make a statement on efforts made to ensure Israeli compliance. [96991]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 10 February 2003]: A number of resolutions are passed at the UN General Assembly each year on the Israel/Palestine question. These resolutions are not legally binding on the parties. Resolutions of the UN General Assembly can be found on the UN website at www.un.org.

Israel has not complied in full with UN Security Council resolutions 242 (1967), 338 (1973), 1397 (2002), 1402 (2002) and 1435 (2002). But these resolutions also contain provisions calling on parties other than Israel to take certain action e.g. agreeing a cease-fire, recognising Israel's sovereignty. We continue to support all efforts to resume the Middle East Peace Process, including through the work of the Quartet, of which the UN is a member.

Weapons of Mass Destruction

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom provided the United Nations Security Council with new information on the increasing terrorist access to and possible use of (a) nuclear, (b) chemical, (c) biological and (d) other potentially deadly materials prior to the debate on combating terrorism in the United Nations Security Council on 20 January. [96926]

Mr. Rammell: The United Kingdom provided no new information to the United Nations Security Council (UNSC) specifically in connection with the debate on combating terrorism on 20 January. In his speech on 20 January to the UNSC my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary highlighted the need to recognise the dangers inherent in a world where WMD and terrorism co-exist.

We remain in close contact on these issues with Security Council partners and have also shared information with fellow members of multilateral export control regimes. In addition we regularly share information on the proliferation of Weapons of Mass Destruction with the IAEA and the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW).

Zimbabwe

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sanctions are in place against members of the Zimbabwe Government. [93611]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale today (UIN 94093 and 94094).

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether the Government intend to extend the travel ban on President Mugabe and the other Zimbabwe government officials beyond 18 February; whether it will do so in association with other European Union countries; and if he will make a statement; [94093]

(2) what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the effectiveness of the sanctions applied to (a) President Mugabe and (b) other members of the government of Zimbabwe; what consideration the Government have given to extending the travel restrictions to other ministers and officials of the Government; and if he will make a statement. [94094]

Mr. Rammell: The EU imposed targeted sanctions on the Zimbabwe Government on 18 February 2002 (a travel ban and assets freeze on leading members of the ZANU-PF regime and an arms embargo). They are proving effective in helping to isolate the ZANU-PF leadership without hurting the ordinary people of Zimbabwe. The sanctions were extended twice in 2002, to ensure that all Government ministers and politburo members were covered (79 people in total). We have not ruled out further additions.

We want to see the current EU measures extended beyond 18 February. But this requires a unanimous decision by all EU member states.

We have been in regular contact in recent weeks with all EU partners. EU Foreign Ministers discussed this issue, and the future of the overall sanctions regime, on 27 January, but did not reach a decision. Permanent Representatives discussed it on 30 January and on 5 February, again without reaching consensus. The UK will continue to argue for the maintenance of a robust sanctions regime at the next Coreper meeting on 12 February.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British Government's policy on what constitutes political dialogue that promotes democracy, human rights and the rule of law in Zimbabwe, as expressed in the Council Common Position concerning restrictive measures against Zimbabwe, Article 3.4–2002/145/CFSP; what discussions he has had with European partners on reaching a common understanding of this article; and if he will make a statement. [96362]

Mr. Rammell: Decisions on what constitutes political dialogue that promotes democracy, human rights and the rule of law in Zimbabwe are made on a case-by-case basis, in consultation with EU partners.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action on the situation in Zimbabwe European Union governments have agreed to take in meetings of the General Affairs and External Relations Council and at meetings of the European Council during the Danish Presidency of the EU; and if he will make a statement. [96364]

Mr. Rammell: Zimbabwe was discussed at three meetings of the General Affairs and External Relations Council under the Danish Presidency.

On 22 July 2002, the Council decided to extend the travel ban list to include 79 names, continue "appropriate measures" towards Zimbabwe under the Cotonou agreement, condemn the fast track land reform process as a cause of the present crisis and decide to continue to expand its programme of humanitarian assistance in Zimbabwe.

On 30 September the Council discussed preparations for the EU-SADC Ministerial Meeting which took place in Maputo in November, including Zimbabwean participation.

On 10 December the Council agreed that the Troika would visit Africa to discuss arrangements for the EU-Africa Summit, including Zimbabwean participation.

The European Council did not discuss Zimbabwe under the Danish Presidency. Full conclusions are available from the Council website, which is at: www.europa.eu.int

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether those Zimbabwean officials with assets frozen under EU sanctions will be able to access those assets if that sanctions regime is not extended on 18 February; what measures would be in place to stop this money returning to Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement; [96371]

(2) what (a) bilateral and (b) multilateral steps government departments are taking to ensure that those Zimbabwean Government officials' assets that are frozen under EU sanctions will remain frozen should the EU's sanctions regime not be extended on 18 February; and if he will make a statement. [96372]

Mr. Rammell [holding answer 7 February 2003]: The Government remain committed to a rollover of a robust EU package of measures against the ZANU-PF regime, including the assets freeze.

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that people born in the UK but living in Zimbabwe may have their passport stamped born in UK. [97173]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The town of birth is shown in British passports, but not the actual country unless it is needed to avoid ambiguity. We have no plans to stamp the UK as place of birth into the passports of British citizens living in Zimbabwe.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Minimum Income Standard

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions he has had with the Treasury to establish a minimum income standard which includes targeted support to meet the costs of caring for a disabled child. [96312]

Maria Eagle: DWP Ministers meet with ministerial colleagues regularly to discuss issues related to the alleviation of child poverty. They attend the Ministerial Group on Children and Young People (MISC9) and the Joint Ministerial Committee on Poverty, both of which address child poverty issues.

We do recognise that disabled children, and their families, have additional needs. We are committed to helping severely disabled people with the extra costs they face as a result of their disabilities. In April 2002 the disabled child premium was increased by £5 a week on top of the normal uprating, to £35.50. In April 2003, it will rise again by £5 above inflation, to more than £40 a week on top of basic Income Support or tax credits. In addition, the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance was extended to three and four-year-olds in April 2001, providing an extra £39.30 a week to those families.

A full analysis of our strategy to eradicate child poverty is given in our annual "Opportunity for all" reports. "Opportunity for all—fourth annual report" (CM 5598) was published in September 2002. It reports on a range of outcome indicators covering many dimensions of poverty and social exclusion.

Benefit/Pension Entitlement

Mrs. Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if the Government will review benefit and pension entitlement with regard to the relationship between the lower earnings threshold and national insurance contributions. [97076]

Mr. McCartney: The Lower Earnings Limit is currently set at £75 a week, and will rise to £77 a week from the start of the new tax year.

Until April 2000 employees started paying national insurance contributions, and building up entitlement to contributory benefits, once their earnings reached the Lower Earnings Limit. However from April 2000 a new employees' earnings threshold was introduced as the point from which employees start to pay contributions. This is currently £89 a week, and will remain at this level for 2003–04. This means that employees who earn between the Lower Earnings Level and the earnings threshold do not have to pay national insurance contributions, but nevertheless continue to build up entitlement to contributory benefits such as state pension.

The recent Green Paper "Simplicity, security and choice: Working and saving for retirement" (Cm 5677) recognised that some people, in particular women, in low-paid or part-time work may face difficulties in accruing sufficient individual rights for the state pension. We will continue to look at the effect of this on contributory and other benefits.

Demography

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the Office for National Statistics' report "Social Trends" predicting a continued rise in the proportion of the population over 65; and if he will make a statement. [96729]

Mr. McCartney: The number of people aged over 65 in the UK is expected to increase more rapidly than the population as a whole, leading to a rise in the proportion of the population aged over 65.

The figures in the Office for National Statistics' report "Social Trends" predicting the rise in the proportion of the population over 65 are the same as those considered by this Department when producing the pensions Green Paper, "Simplicity, security and choice: Working and saving for retirement" (Cm5677).

The Green Paper sets out our proposals.

Departmental Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list consultations his Department has conducted since it was established; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed. [97424]

Mr. McCartney: The Government's code of practice on written consultation applies to written consultations which have a national impact on policy and services from 1 January 2001. The Department for Work and Pensions came into being in June 2001. All copies of consultation documents are published online on both the Department for Work and Pensions and UK Online websites. Paper copies are also available.

Details on the timing of each consultation since June 2001 are in the table.

Title of consultation	Start date	End date
Amending the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979	23.07.01	15.10.01

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions for what reasons disability living allowance spending has increased from 1995–96 to 2003–04 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [97361]

Maria Eagle: DLA provides a contribution towards the extra costs faced by severely disabled people. It is paid to those who require personal care and/or have walking difficulties as a result of their disabilities. Spending on the benefit has increased steadily year on year because more people than ever are receiving the benefit (and because its value has been maintained by increasing the rates at which it is paid each year in line with the movement in prices as measured by the retail prices index).

Early Years and Sure Start

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his Department's policy in respect of Early Years and Sure Start funding is in relation to funding for (a) Stoke on Trent and (b) Staffordshire; and who will take the lead in developing services. [93161]

Maria Eagle: Sure Start Unit brings together at a national level responsibility for early education, childcare and health and family support in one, cross-departmental unit. This national change does not, however, alter the existing roles and responsibilities of Local Authorities (including Stoke on Trent and Staffordshire). They retain their significant responsibilities under the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 for early years and childcare. This includes developing local strategic plans for delivery against key government targets for early years and childcare services. Funding is provided to local authorities to enable them to achieve targets and deliver against objectives set out in their plans.

There are also no current plans to change the funding arrangements for Sure Start Local Programmes. Local Authorities will need to take the services provided through such programmes into account in developing their plans.

External Consultants

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 21 January 2003 to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), Official Report, column 261W, on external consultants, if he will list the projects completed by external consultants during 2001–02, with the cost of each project. [96786]

Mr. McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) on 4 February 2003, Official Report, column 238W.

Ménière's Disease

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will treat those suffering from Ménière's disease as eligible for disability living allowance. [96287]

Maria Eagle: People with Ménière's disease are entitled to Disability Living Allowance if they meet the usual qualifying conditions for the benefit, which depend on the effects that severe physical or mental disability have on a person's need for personal care and/or their ability to walk and not on particular disabilities or diagnoses.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many minimum income guarantee claimants are aged (a) 75 and above and (b) 80 and above. [97381]

Mr. McCartney: The information is shown in the table.

Age	Number of MIG claimants
75 and over	930,400
80 and over	659,000

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90594]

Mr. McCartney: The information is in the table.

Estimate of the full year impact on the Department of Work and Pensions of increases to the National Minimum Wage (NMW)

Proposed NMW (£)	England[1]	Scotland[1]	Wales[1]	Total[1]
(a) 4.26	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
(b) 4.17	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
(c) 4.87	6.990	0.949	0.496	8.435
(d) 5.00	9.863	1.342	0.694	11.899
(e) 5.30	16.952	2.340	1.194	20.486

[1] Figures are in £ millions

Notes:

1. Total costs include Employers National Insurance Contributions (ERNIC) and superannuation charges.

2. Average earnings have increased by 3.8 per cent. over the 12 months to November 2002 (Source: Office of National Statistics, "Average Earnings" published 15 January 2003). When applied to the 2002 NMW this would increase the rate to £4.26. All DWP staff are paid hourly rates above this level.

NIRS2

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many people received (a) compensation under the existing rules and (b) flat rate £10 payments for incorrect payments triggered by the NIRS2 computer system; [83211]

(2) how much was paid in (a) compensation under the existing rules and (b) flat rate £10 payments for incorrect payments triggered by the NIRS2 computer system. [83212]

Malcolm Wicks: Precise numbers of people who received compensation under the existing rules is not available but, in total, compensation amounting to £4,604,282 has been paid to our customers and of that amount £1,650,122 was in respect of compensation under the existing Departmental scheme; and £2,954,160 was in respect of the £10 special scheme.

Absenteeism

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in his Department, its predecessors and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93498]

Mr. McCartney: Between 1 January 2001 and 31 December 2001 there were 31,296 recorded instances of unauthorised absence (i.e. incidences of strike action and people absent without leave only) for the Department and each of its constituent agencies. The Department for Work and Pensions is committed to working in partnership as a means of eliminating industrial action.

Between 1 January 2002 and 31 December 2002 there were 25,024 instances of unauthorised absences (absenteeism) in the Department and each of its constituent agencies.

The number of instances of unauthorised absences for the Department, its predecessors and its agencies between 1990 and 2000 is not available.

The number of instances of unauthorised absence for the Department and each of its agencies for January 2003 is not available yet.

The rate of staff sickness in the Department, its predecessors and each of its agencies between 1990 and 1993 is not available. ITSA was privatised during 1998/1999, therefore consistent staff sickness rate figures for ITSA are not available between 2000 and 2003. The Appeals Service became a departmental agency in April 2000.

The rate of staff sickness for The Appeals Service prior to April 2000 is therefore not available. The Contributions Agency was transferred to the Inland Revenue in 1999.

The rate of staff sickness in the Department's remaining constituent agencies between 1994 and 2001 is summarised below. The figures represent the average number of working days lost per staff year.

Year[1]	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001

Figures for 2002 are currently being collected and will be published later this year. In 1998 the Cabinet Office set targets to reduce sickness absenteeism by 20 per cent. at the end of 2001 and by 30 per cent. at the end of 2003.

This equated to a target for all agencies of 9.5 days by December 2001 and 8 days for the Department by December 2003. The Department for Work and Pensions is committed to meeting this target by continuing to manage sickness absence effectively.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many workers are in (a) defined contribution and (b) final salary occupational schemes; and how many and what proportion of those workers are contracted out of the state scheme. [96178]

Mr. McCartney: Partial preliminary results from the GAD 2000 survey have been published but have not yet ybeen fully validated and do not give details of public sector scheme membership.

The figures show active membership of occupational pension schemes at the time the survey was carried out, rather than the total membership throughout the 1995–96 tax year.

Thousand

Textile Industry (Redundant Staff)

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what retraining programme his Department supports for redundant staff of the textile industry. [92158]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Jobcentre Plus offers assistance to help companies handle any significant reduction in staffing they may have to make, and help to those employees who are affected in identifying alternative jobs or any training they require.

We have introduced the Rapid Response Service to provide support for people affected by redundancies including those in the textile industries and help them make the transition into sustainable new jobs. The nature of the help provided by the service is tailored to the needs of the individuals, the employer and the local labour market. This can include offering information, advice and guidance to those affected, help with job search, facilitating retraining where necessary or developing customised retraining programmes. People affected by redundancy can also have early access to Jobcentre Plus programmes such as the new deals and work-based learning for adults.

We offer a range of training opportunities to ensure that unemployed people, including those made redundant from the textile industry, have the skills and experience they need to find and remain at work. Work Based Learning for Adults provides people with real work experience and the opportunity to develop job-related skills. We have developed Ambition programmes to help unemployed and disadvantaged people gain the right skills to meet the needs of employers in key sectors such as construction, retail, information technology and energy.

We, along with colleagues in the Department for Education and Skills and the Department for Trade and Industry, have asked the regional development agencies to lead in the development of the frameworks for regional employment and skills action (FRESAs). This strategic partnership of organisations includes Jobcentre Plus, the CBI, the TUC, the Learning and Skills Council and local authorities. The work of the FRESAs will provide a co-ordinated strategy for skills in each region, ensuring a more efficient and co-ordinated service for employers and individuals alike. Each region has had a Framework in place since October 2002.

Unallocated Expenditure

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the current unallocated provision in his Department's total resource and capital budget for 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [97344]

Mr. McCartney: The Departmental Unallocated Provision for the financial year 2003–04 is £105.088 million.

Winter Fuel Payment/Concessionary TV Licence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the administrative costs of (a) the winter fuel allowance and (b) the free TV licence for the over 75s, in each year from 1998–99 to 2003–04 (planned). [97356]

Mr. McCartney: Information is not currently available in the format requested. The Department now accounts for its administration and benefit expenditure by Strategic Objective, as set out in its Public Service Agreements (PSA), and by individual Requests for Resources (RfRs), as set out in the Departmental Estimates and Accounts.

HEALTH

Alcohol Strategy

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the alcohol strategy will ensure that young people with underlying emotional or mental health problems be assessed and where necessary referred to tier 3 Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services. [96003]

Ms Blears: The Government are committed to implementing the National Alcohol Harm Reduction Strategy by 2004. The strategy will be prepared by the Cabinet Office strategy unit, who will consider a wide range of issues including health service needs and the needs of vulnerable young people. The strategy will be published in summer 2003.

The capacity of the child and adolescent mental health services to respond to a range of needs—including those of young people whose alcohol problems have underlying emotional/mental health causes—is steadily improving. However, appropriate assessment and referral arrangements are for local services to determine.

Nutritional Health

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research projects his Department is sponsoring into the links between poor diet and specific diseases; and what plans he has for future research. [96830]

Ms Blears: Through the policy research programme, the Department has funded a programme of research, in two phases and with a total value of about £2.5 million, which has addressed priorities important to improving nutritional health.

The first phase, from 1994 to 1997, which was commissioned and managed jointly with the Medical Research Council (MRC), focused specifically on the relationship between nutritional factors and clinical outcome and, in particular on the role of diet and nutrition in the prevention and development of cancers and cardiovascular disease.

The second phase, from 1997 to 2002, included studies that looked at facilitators and barriers to good nutritional health, obesity and interventions aimed at achieving recommended dietary changes, particularly in low-income groups. Still looking at the dietary risk factors linking to cardiovascular disease and cancers, this phase of the programme also included work on nutritional aspects of bone health.

This time limited programme of research has now been completed and the Department is currently producing an overview of findings from the second phase, the purpose of which is to highlight key messages for policy and practice. The Department is also currently funding a systematic review of the facilitators and barriers to healthy eating for children aged 4 to 10 years, having just completed a similar review for young people.

The Department has no immediate plans to commission additional work following on from this programme, but further studies that link poor diet and specific diseases might emerge as priorities under future bidding rounds for policy research programme funding.

In addition, the Department has funded, via the National Asthma Campaign managed programme, a study examining the effect of dietary supplementation with magnesium or vitamin C in asthma.

The main Government agency for research into the causes and treatments of disease is the MRC, which receives its funding from the Department of Trade and Industry via the Office of Science and Technology. The MRC has a large portfolio covering all aspects of nutrition from basic research to clinical trials. In 2001–02 the MRC spent an estimated £316.6 million on its nutrition portfolio.

Included in this figure is the work being carried out at the MRC resource centre for human nutrition research, the Dunne Nutrition Unit in Cambridge and the international nutrition group in Gambia. Examples of the research covered in the portfolio are projects designed to test the hypothesis that nutrition during infancy and childhood has a significant impact on health, neuro-cognitive development and later propensity to disease, and projects designed to identify the principal molecular, cellular and genetic mechanisms by which poor maternal nutrition might impair the early development of the mammalian embryo.

Acrylamide

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the research commissioned by the Food Standards Agency into the prevalence of acrylamide in cooked and prepared food. [96244]

Ms Blears: Following the Swedish research published in April 2002, the Food Standards Agency (FSA) commissioned its own work, published in May 2002, which confirmed these initial findings. Since then, the FSA has played a significant role in contributing to European and international efforts to develop an understanding of acrylamide in food.

The FSA is currently negotiating contracts with organisations successful in a recent tender exercise for research projects in the following areas:

Identification of the mechanism of formation of acrylamide in cooked foods, with the aim of recommending possible means of controlling acrylamide formation.

Identification of potential precursors in food and investigation of the relationship between processing parameters such as ingredients, cooking temperatures etc and the formation of acrylamide, with a view to identifying methods to reduce levels in cereal-based food.

Assessment of the level of acrylamide in the United Kingdom diet.

The Agency also recently issued a further call for research proposals investigating the effect of domestic cooking on acrylamide levels in food.

NHS Salaries

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list posts in acute hospital trusts carrying a salary of more than £100,000; [93640]

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS posts are paid a salary in excess of £100,000 in each national health service trust in England. [96102]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the numbers of employees for whom information is available centrally whose remuneration in 2001–02 was over £100,000 has been placed in the Library. These figures largely cover medical consultants. The figures refer to all National Health Service trusts.

Asylum Seekers

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many registered asylum seekers have received dialysis treatment from the NHS in each of the last three years. [97283]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 11 February 2003]: This information is not held centrally.

Attention Deficit Disorder

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the National Service Framework for Children will include guidance concerning the early diagnosis and treatment of attention deficient disorder and attention deficit hyper-activity disorder. [96640]

Jacqui Smith: The national service framework for children, young people and maternity services will raise standards of care for children generally within the national health service, local authority social services and education services.

A small number of exemplars will be developed to illustrate the main principles, although no decision has been made on the conditions to be covered.

Blood Stocks

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of blood stocks available to NHS hospitals in the United Kingdom. [96095]

Ms Blears: For the past three years national health service hospitals in England have received all the blood they need. On 6 February 2003, 63,770 units of blood were held centrally. This represents seven days supply. At any one time, a further two days supply of blood are being processed by the National Blood Service.

Information on the current levels of blood stocks in Scotland and Wales is the responsibility of the devolved Administrations. While the institutions in Northern Ireland are dissolved, responsibility rests with Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office.

Brighton Body Positive Project

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the future funding (a) through the AIDS support grant and (b) from the Brighton and Hove PCT of the Brighton Body Positive Project; [96027]

(2) if he will make a statement on the work of the Brighton Body Positive Project; [96028]

(3) what the impact will be on public funding for the Brighton Body Positive Project of changes in the way the AIDS support grant is allocated. [96030]

Ms Blears: The Department values the important contribution that voluntary organisations like Brighton Body Positive can make to services for people with HIV. The future funding of Brighton Body Positive will be for the local commissioners of HIV services to decide taking account of local priorities and available resources.

The review of the AIDS support grant is currently being finalised. Introduction of the revised formula from April 2003 will be managed to avoid destabilising existing services in areas where funding is reduced.

The review is aimed at addressing the changing nature of the HIV epidemic in England, including the social care needs of families and children affected by HIV.

Child Protection

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many communications to social services departments regarding procedures for dealing with vulnerable children have been issued by his Department since 25 February 2000. [96037]

Jacqui Smith: Communications to social services departments regarding procedures for dealing with vulnerable children since February 2000 have included:

the "Framework for the Assessment of Children in Need and their Families (April 2000)";

together with, "Assessing Children in Need and their Families: Practice Guidance (April 2000)"; supplementary guidance to "Working Together to Safeguard Children (December 1999)" guidance focusing on "Safeguarding Children Involved In Prostitution (June 2000)"; guidance focusing on "Complex Child Abuse Investigations: Inter-Agency Issues (May 2002)";

supplementary guidance to "Working Together to Safeguard Children (December 1999)" focusing on "Safeguarding Children in whom Illness is Induced or Fabricated by Carers with Parenting Responsibilities (August 2002)";

"Learning from Past Experience—A Review of Serious Case Reviews (June 2002)";

my letter of 28 January 2002, Child Protection Responsibilities of Primary Care Trusts;

my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health's letter of 28 January 2003 reminding trusts of their responsibilities to children, particularly those relating to child protection;

Local Authority Circular (2000)18 "Amendment to guidance to local authority social services departments on visits by children to special hospitals";

Local Authority Circular (2001)27 "Access to education for children and young people with medical needs";

Local Authority Circular (2002)17 "Children missing from care and from home: good practice guidance";

Local Authority Social Services Letter (2001)2 "The Children and Families court advisory and support service (CAFCASS) and complaints about the functioning of child protection conferences"; and Local Authority Social Services Letter (2002)4 "Guidance on accommodating children in need and their families".

Children in Care

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what central database is kept of children in the care of Social Services who go missing from their usual place of residence. [95995]

Jacqui Smith: Every English local authority is required to submit an annual statistical return to the Department, which includes information about the numbers of children who have gone missing from care in their area over a 12 month period.

"Children Missing from Care and Home—a guide to good practice" was issued to every English local authority in November 2002, under Section 7 of the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970. The guidance requires that where a child in care is assessed to be missing, social services should pass on this information to the police who should then ensure that their details are included on the police national computer.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many communications to NHS trusts regarding procedures for dealing with children suspected of suffering harm at the hands of their carers have been issued by his Department since 25 February 2000. [96038]

Jacqui Smith: Communications to national health service trusts regarding procedures for dealing with children suspected of suffering harm at the hands of their carers include:

"the Framework for the Assessment of Children in Need and their Families (April 2000)";

together with, "Assessing Children in Need and their Families: Practice Guidance (April 2000)";

supplementary guidance to "Working Together to Safeguard Children (December 1999)" focusing on "Safeguarding Children Involved In Prostitution (June 2000)";

guidance focusing on "Complex Child Abuse Investigations: Inter-Agency Issues (May 2002)"

supplementary guidance to "Working Together to Safeguard Children (December 1999)" focusing on "Safeguarding Children in whom Illness is Induced or Fabricated by Carers with Parenting Responsibilities (August 2002)";

my letter of 28 January 2002 "Child Protection Responsibilities of Primary Care Trusts";

my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health's letter of 28 January 2003 reminding trusts of their responsibilities to children, particularly those relating to child protection and;

Revised Health Service Circular HSC 1999/160 (issued in August 2000) "Visits by Children to Ashworth, Broadmoor and Rampton Hospitals Directions".

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met a delegation of (a) children in care and (b) local authority social service directors to discuss improvements in educating children in care; and when he next plans to do so. [96122]

Jacqui Smith: I meet regularly with representatives of the Association of Directors of Social Services to discuss a range of children's services issues including the educational achievement of children in care. The last meeting took place on 18 December 2002. The next meeting is scheduled for 18 March 2003.

Though I have not met recently with a delegation of children in care, I am kept informed of their views through the Quality Protects national reference group. The group comprises children and young people in care as well as young people who have left care. The group was established to provide a means by which Government can hear the views of children and young people on how the Quality Protects programme is working on the ground.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome sufferers there are in England; how many of them are receiving treatment from the NHS; and if he will make a statement. [97504]

Jacqui Smith: The Department of Health does not routinely collect statistics on the prevalence of individual conditions. The report of the independent chronic fatigue syndrome/myalgicencephalomyelitis working group, published in January 2002, estimated a population prevalence of around 0.2 to 0.4 per cent, in adults and around 0.07 per cent.in children.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent guidance he has issued to hospital trusts and PCTs on the provision of services to myalgic encephalomyelitis/chronic fatigue syndrome sufferers; and if he will make a statement. [97505]

Jacqui Smith: We have issued no guidance to hospital trusts and primary care trusts on the provision of services to patients with chronic fatigue syndrome/ myalgic encephalomyelitis (CFS/ME).

In October 2002 however, we did make the National Health Service aware, through the Chief Executive's Bulletin and the GP Bulletin, of the guidance produced by Action for ME called Guidance on the management of CFS/ME.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died from coronary heart disease in (a) Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) the North East and (d) the UK in each year since 1997; and what measures his Department has taken to help reduce deaths from coronary heart disease in South Tyneside. [96379]

Ms Blears: Statistical returns of deaths attributed to coronary heart disease are currently available for the period 1997–2001, and are shown in the table.

Deaths from coronary heart disease[1], 1997 to 2001[2]

Year	Jarrow parliamentary constituency	South Tyneside unitary authority	North East Government Office Region	United Kingdom
1997	243	478	7,158	140,209
1998	206	428	7,097	138,110
1999	218	404	6,550	132,024
2000	212	384	6,161	124,063
2001	179	324	5,955	120,957

Notes:

Deaths selected using International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) codes 410–414, and International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes 120–125. ICD-9 codes were used to classify these deaths from 1997 to 2000 in England and Wales and Northern Ireland, and from 1997 to 1999 inScotland. ICD-10 codes were used in subsequent years.

Years in which deaths occurred in England & Wales. Years in which deaths were registered in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

The Government are committed to tackling the historical social and geographical inequalities of the impact of coronary heart disease (CHD). We are taking action now to remedy these inequalities through the implementation of the national service framework for CHD, which sets clear national standards for the prevention and treatment of CHD.

In the area of CHD prevention, one example of the local implementation of these initiatives is that National Health Service smoking cessation services in Gateshead and South Tyneside Health authority helped over 4,000 people to give up smoking for at least four weeks between April 2000 and March 2002. South Tyneside Primary Care Trust has also been invited by the New Opportunities Fund to make an application for a Five-a-day grant to increase awareness of and access to fruit and vegetables.

In the area of CHD diagnosis, there has been considerable expansion of diagnostic angiography services locally over recent years, with a New Opportunities Fund financed laboratory established in Sunderland to supplement a new Gateshead laboratory.

In the field of primary care, at least 84 per cent, of patients who have suffered a heart attack are now being prescribed life-saving statins. A table showing the rate of increase of the prescription of statins in South Tyneside and nationally over the last three years, has been placed in the Library.

One of the aims of the Patient Choice initiative which has been in place since July last year is to reduce the impact of regional variations in secondary treatment provision for CHD patients. Under this initiative, CHD patients who have been waiting more than six months for a revascularisation procedure are offered the opportunity to be treated at a hospital or clinic of their choice, which may be either another NHS hospital or a hospital or clinic in the private sector. This and other associated initiatives are currently offering the possibility of shorter waits for treatment to patients in South Tyneside and many other areas, and local NHS service providers are keen to encourage eligible patients to take part.

There has been little progress made in changes to lower emissions in the last few years, except during the last year, when LPG vehicles have been added to the choice list as they become available from manufacturers. We hope to replace our pool car fleet with LPG vehicles and will be reviewing our choice list before the end of 2003 to include mor of these.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 25 November from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Anne France; [92283]

(2) why he has not replied to the letter to him dated 25 November from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Anne France. [94691]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 10 February.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 2 December from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Z. Daugavietis; [92284]

(2) why he has not replied to the letter to him dated 2 December from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. Z. Daugavietis; [94697]

(3) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 2 December from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Z. Daugavietis. [97085]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent to my right hon. Friend on 10 February.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many subject access requests for information under the Data Protection Act 1998 were received by his Department in each of the last three years; and how many were (a) fulfilled in full within the statutory period, (b) fulfilled in full beyond the statutory period, (c) fulfilled in part and (d) have not been fulfilled, in each of the last three years. [92188]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer Tuesday 21 January 2003]: The table below sets out the number of requests, on an annual basis, received since 1 March 2000, when the Act came into force. Figures in the last column represent requests that have been made where work is in progress or where more information from the data subject is awaited.

Requests fulfilled:

	Within statutory period	Beyond statutory period	In part	Not fulfilled/ work in progress
1 Mar 2000 to 31 Dec 2000	0	2	—	—
1 Jan 2001 to 31 Dec 2001	10	8	—	—
1 Jan 2002 to 31 Dec 2002	161	105	—	5

Note:
Includes the Department of Health, Medicines Control Agency, Medical Devices Agency, NHS Pensions Agency, NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency.

Of 105 requests fulfilled beyond the statutory period in 2002, five were from the NHS Pensions Agency, and 100 from the Department of Health.

The Department aims to respond to requests within the statutory period and allocates resources to meet anticipated numbers of requests. Requests over the past three years have averaged three or four per month on a steady upward trend. The number of complex requests relating to contact over many years with staff in different areas of the Department has also been increasing. Each of these requires substantial effort to collect and analyse the data requested.

In June 2002, 86 requests were received from hon. Members. In July, seven of nine requests were from hon. Members. This peak of demand stretched the resources available, even though additional staff were engaged quickly.

The delays reported by the NHS Pensions Agency were associated with a transfer of responsibility for subject access requests and are not expected to occur again.

Departmental Website

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the ease of use of the Department of Health website. [95690]

Mr. Lammy: A programme of research among users of the Department's website started in autumn 2001. This extensive work used a variety of methods, such as face to face and telephone interviews, group work and online surveys, to assess the needs of professional and lay users of the website.

The initial objective was to inform changes to the site design, notably to the home page and top-level section pages, which were implemented during 2002. These re-designs were supported by usability testing—observing users carrying out specified tasks.

Follow-up research was conducted late in 2002 to assess progress and further inform future development.

Based on the findings of both these research exercises, we are now progressing major improvements to the website, which will address the key needs of users; namely the site structure, the search engine and the consistency of design and navigation.

A group of users is being consulted as this work moves forward to ensure that the resulting changes will better enable the site to meet user requirements.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times his Department's (a) website and (b) website search engine crashed in each of the last three years; and what the length of time of each outage was. [95691]

Mr. Lammy: Information on the Department of Health website outages has only been collected since hosting was taken over by a new internet service provider on 21 June 2002.

The figures for the total downtime per month and the percentage of uptime for the Department's website, www.doh.gov.uk, are shown in table 1. We cannot provide a figure for the number of individual outages for the Department's website.

The figures for the total number of outages and the maximum total downtime per month for the Department's search engine, http://search2.openobjects.com/kbroker/doh/search.isp, are shown in table 2.

Table 1: Website outage figures for www.doh.gov.uk (July 2002-January 2003)

Month/year	Total down time (mins)	Total uptime (percentage)
July 2002	137	99.7
August 2002	239	99.5
September 2002	759	98.3
October 2002	459	98.9

Diabetes

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children are diagnosed with type 2 diabetes, broken down by age. [96069]

Mr. Lammy: This information is not available in the form requested.

Dialysis Treatment

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have received dialysis treatment from the NHS in each of the last three years. [97308]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 11 February 2003]: Figures for the number of patients receiving hospital-based haemodialysis, home haemodialysis and peritoneal dialysis are available from Renal Survey data. Surveys were undertaken in 1993, 1995 and 1998.

	Number of hospital haemodialysis patients in England	Number of home haemodialysis patients in England	Number of peritoneal dialysis patients in England	Total number of dialysis patients in England
1993	3,899	806	4,340	9,045
1995	5,383	725	4,880	10,988
1998	7,788	516	5,101	13,405

A further survey has been commissioned to collect data in 2002.

Doctors

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of newly qualified doctors joined the NHS in each of the past 10 years. [96514]

Jacqui Smith: Pre-registration house officers (PRHOs) are doctors who, having graduated from medical school, must successfully complete a year of work in the national health service in order to achieve full registration with the General Medical Council.

The table shows the number of PRHOs in England at 30 September in the appropriate year and graduate output from medical school at 31 July for each of those years. We do not collect data on the number of junior doctors joining the NHS each year.

Between 1992 and 2002, the number of PRHOs has increased from 3,040 to 3,680; a rise of 640, or 21 per cent.

Medical return--First Registrable Medical Qualification—output during the year ended 31 July 1992 to 31 July 2002 and numbers of PRHO's at 30 September

Year	Total output England	PRHOs England
1992	2,790	3,040
1993	2,760	3,090
1994	2,870	3,020
1995	2,910	3,220
1996	2,980	3,220
1997	3,030	3,360
1998	3,260	3,450
1999	3,100	3,540
2000	3,370	3,640
2001	3,290	3,680
2002	3,280	[1]—

Emergency Readmissions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures are collected on the reasons for people over the age of 75 being admitted to hospital as an emergency readmission within (a) 14 days and (b) 28 days of their discharge from hospital. [95692]

Jacqui Smith: Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) data include information on the reason for an admission, including a readmission, to hospital. However, only overall readmission numbers and rates are identified and calculated. The reason for an admission for people readmitted following a recent discharge has not routinely been drawn from HES and analysed.

Food Supplements

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what level of potency caustic soda and similar chemicals will be permitted in food supplements under the draft Food Supplements (England) Regulations; and what assessment he has made of the safety of the inclusion of caustic soda and similar chemicals in food supplements. [96479]

Ms Blears: Neither the Food Supplements Directive nor the implementing Food Supplements (England) Regulations set levels at which the substances in the permitted lists may be used in the manufacture of food supplements.

The lists of permitted substances in the Food Supplements Directive were drawn directly from positive lists in existing European Union legislation, including that on infant formulae and weaning foods, and substances on the lists have already been assessed for safety and bioavailability by the EU Scientific Committee on Food.

As for other foods, it is the responsibility of manufacturers to ensure that food supplements comply with the food safety requirements of the Food Safety Act 1990. Calcium oxide, sodium hydroxide (caustic soda) and potassium hydroxide are permitted to be used in food at levels necessary for a technological function, such as regulation of acidity. They are used at low concentrations that do not affect the safety of the food.

General Practitioners

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the three month general practitioner vacancy rate figures are, broken down by primary care trust in England. [96176]

Jacqui Smith: The three month general practitioner vacancy rate published in the Department's February 2002 vacancy survey was 2.7 per cent. for England. The vacancy rate is estimated from results of a sample of 1,000 questionnaires sent to GP practices.

In previous years there has been no way to identify which primary care trust (PCT) a vacancy was in; especially since the last survey took place prior to the formation of the existing PCTs.

In view of this and the relatively small size of the sample, it is not possible to produce reliable estimates of the vacancy rate at PCT level.

Health Protection Agency

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that preparations for establishing the Health Protection Agency do not add significantly to the workload of the agencies responsible for responding to acts of bio-terrorism. [95694]

Ms Blears: We intend that the Health Protection Agency (HPA) will be responsible for a number of functions currently performed by a number of different bodies. The amalgamation of these responsibilities into a single agency is designed to strengthen specialist support for health protection and health emergency planning.

We are working closely with the various agencies concerned to ensure that the transfer of responsibilities to the HPA goes smoothly.

Kava-kava

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to bring into force the Kava-Kava in Food (England) Regulations 2002. [96060]

Ms Blears: The Kava-Kava in Food (England) Regulations 2002 came into force on 13 January 2003.

Macular Degeneration

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if his Department has started making arrangements to fast-track verteporfin PDT treatment for patients with wet age-related macular degeneration; [95686]

(2) whether he will guarantee continued provision of verteporfin PDT for patients with predominantly classic CNV associated with wet age-related macular degeneration; [95685]

(3) if he will provide funding for a clinical study into the (a) optimum treatment regimens, (b) long-term outcomes, (c) quality of life and (d) costs of verteporfin PDT for patients with predominantly classic CNV associated with wet age-related macular degeneration. [95678]

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department will fund a clinical study into the photodynamic treatment of age-related macular degeneration, with particular reference to subfoveal choroidal neovascularisation cases with visudyne. [95834]

Mr. Lammy: The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) is carrying out an appraisal of photodynamic therapy (PDT) as a treatment for age-related macular degeneration. It has not yet published any guidance to the National Health Service on this topic.

NICE prepared its final appraisal determination on PDT and circulated it to consultees on 16 January 2003 We understand this document has been appealed against. NICE will now consider any appeals before publishing its final guidance.

Medical Procedures

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hospitals are capable of intraoperative cell salvage of blood supplies during surgery; [96031]

(2) what has been the impact of intraoperative cell salvage on blood supplies to hospital operating theatres. [96032]

Ms Blears: This information is not collected. The Department published Health Service Circular 2002/009, "Better Blood Transfusion—Appropriate Use of Blood", on 4 July 2002, available on www.doh.gov.uk/publications/coinh.html.

This circular asks national health service trusts and primary care trusts to review and explore the use of effective alternatives to donor blood and the appropriate use of autologous blood transfusion, pre-donation, peri-operative and post operative cell salvage by April 2003. An audit to review the implementation of this guidance will be carried out later this year.

Medium-Secure Units

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in (a) NHS medium-secure units and (b) medium-secure units in the independent sector are awaiting discharge or transfer; what proportion of these patients have no place identified to which they can be discharged or transferred; and how many have been waiting for more than three months. [95903]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The latest available information, at 31 December 2001, indicates that the number of patients awaiting discharge or transfer from national health service medium-secure units was 93 and medium-secure units in the independent sector was 48. There is no current information on waiting times.

Mexico

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 23 January 2003, Official Report, column 477W, on Mexico, if he will make a statement on the usefulness of memorandums of understanding between the United Kingdom and foreign Governments. [96084]

Mr. Milburn: Memoranda of Understanding are helpful in providing a basis for a working relationship between two Governments with the aim of furthering knowledge and co-operation on health issues and ultimately contributing to the improvement of the health of their populations.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times since 2001 he has taken flights on departmental duties in the UK; how many of these were (a) charter flights, (b) first or club class and (c) by helicopter; and who accompanied him on each trip. [95389]

Mr. Lammy: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made two business class return flights and one single business class flight. He was accompanied by one private secretary and one special adviser on each occasion.

My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Lord Hunt of Kings Heath, has made four club class return flights. He was accompanied by one civil servant on each occasion.

The Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton) has made five business class return and three single business class flights. He was accompanied by one civil servant on seven occasions and travelled alone for one other.

The Under-Secretary of State for public health, my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) has made one first class return and one single charter flight. She was accompanied by one civil servant on each occasion.

All travel was undertaken fully in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Library.

MMR Vaccination

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of GPs reached the (a) 70 per cent., (b) 80 per cent. and (c) 90 per cent. target rate for the MMR vaccination last year; [96049]

(2) how many bonuses were and how much in bonuses was paid out last year to GPs for performing MMR vaccinations on new-born babies. [96050]

Ms Blears: MMR vaccination is recommended for all children shortly after their first birthday, with a reinforcing dose before school entry.

In 2001–02, the latest annual return, total payment to general practitioners providing general medical services was £3.145 billion, of which the sums attributable to childhood immunisation targets, including the first dose of MMR, were:

£53.4 million to some 22,430 GPs for the higher target.

£1.9 million to some 1,720 GPs for the lower target.

The percentage of unrestricted principals receiving a target payment for childhood immunisation in the quarter ending 31 March 2001 was 96 per cent. made up of:

7 per cent. meeting the 70 per cent. target.

89 per cent. meeting the 90 per cent. target.

There is no 80 per cent. target. All figures concern only those GPs providing general medical services. Personal medical service GPs have their pay and any targets determined through individual contracts with their primary care trust.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many mobile phones were used by (a) Ministers and special advisers and (b) officials in his Department in each year since 1997; how many were (i) lost and (ii) stolen; and what their cost was. [95980]

Mr. Lammy: Historical data on the users and numbers of central Department of Health mobile phones are not retained. Detailed information is available only for the current financial year. In financial year 2002–03 there are currently 978 mobile phones in use, of which nine are used by Ministers and special advisers.

The costs of purchasing mobile phones for use by Ministers, special advisers and officials in the Department in each financial year since 1997 are shown in the table.

Financial year	Costs (£)
1997–98	9,578
1998–99	6,740
1999–2000	6,254
2000–01	5,063
2001–02	4,891
2002–03	[1]5,730

[1] To date

The Department takes very seriously the protection of all its assets, including mobile phones. All users are made aware of their obligation to safeguard Departmental property. We investigate all losses and our security procedures are kept under constant review. Departmental records do not differentiate between lost and stolen mobile phones.

Figures for the numbers of lost or stolen mobile phones for the financial years 1997–98 to 2002–03 are shown in the table.

Financial year	Numbers lost/stolen	Replacement cost (£)
1997–98	19	769
1998–99	19	691
1999–2000	26	557
2000–01	43	1,332
2001–02	37	987
2002–03	34	2,426

[1] To date

Costs for lost or stolen mobile phones in 2002–03 are higher than for previous years, as most of these phones were lost or stolen within the first two years of purchase and therefore incur higher replacement costs.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department takes to ensure that medical devices which are due to be appraised by NICE have been assessed by clinicians; [95688]

(2) whether his Department provides extra funds for clinicians to assess new medical technologies before they are appraised by NICE. [95683]

Ms Blears: Manufacturers of new medical technologies are responsible for developing the clinical evidence base to demonstrate safety and efficacy for regulatory purposes and to promote their introduction into general clinical practice.

In selecting topics for appraisal by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, one factor which Ministers take into account is the adequacy of the evidence base to support an appraisal.

NHS Bodies

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the combined allocated budgets are for (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06 for the Medicines Control Agency and the Medical Devices Agency (i) in cash terms and (ii) on a full resource budgeting basis. [95774]

Mr. Lammy: Subject to parliamentary approval, the Medicines Control Agency and the Medical Devices Agency will combine to form the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) with effect from 1 April 2003.

The new Agency will operate as a trading fund and its expenditure will be financed mainly by income from charges for the services it provides to the pharmaceutical industry and other customers. The Department will, however, purchase medical devices services from the MHRA and may also, from time to time, issue medium term loans to support capital expenditure or other developments.

The level of Departmental funding for medical devices services in 2003–04 and subsequent years has yet to be finalised. The Department's main estimate for 2003–04 will include provision for the necessary funding in the MHRA's first year.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the allocated budgets are for (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06 for (i) the combined internal directorates of the Department of Health, (ii) NHS Estates Agency, (iii) NHS Pensions Agency and (iv) NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency (A) in cash terms and (B) on a full resource budgeting basis. [95773]

Mr. Lammy: Budgets for financial years covered by the 2002 Spending Review have not yet been finalised for the Department's internal directorates, the NHS Pensions Agency or the NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency. As a trading fund, most of the expenditure of NHS Estates falls outside the Department's budgets. The future budget for services the Department purchases from NHS Estates has also not yet been finalised.

NHS Dentistry

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were registered with an NHS dentist in (a) the East Worthing and Shoreham constituency, (b) West Sussex and (c) the Surrey and Sussex Strategic Health Authority area in each year since 1997. [96101]

Ms Blears: The available information is for the period 1997 to 2001 for health authorities (HA). For 2002, the information is at primary care trust (PCT) level. These are shown in the tables together with the totals for Surrey and Sussex Strategic Health Authority (StHA).

Table 1 shows the number of registrations in East Surrey, West Surrey, East Sussex, Brighton and Hove and West Sussex HA area at 30 September in each of the years 1997 to 2001.

Table 2 shows the number of registrations in Surrey and Sussex StHA area by PCT at 30 September 2002.

Table 1: General Dental Service: number of registrations[1] in East Surrey, West Surrey, East Sussex, Brighton and Hove and West Sussex health authorities at 30 September 1997 to 2001

West Sussex	410	359	367	357	363

[1] The registration number for September 1997 is not comparable with the later figures because of the change in the registration periods.

Notes:

1. Registrations lapse if patients do not return to their dentists within 15 months. Registration rates will exclude patients who have not been to their GDS dentist within the past 15 months and patients who receive dental treatment from other NHS dental services.

2. During the period 1997 to 2002, the registration numbers are affected by the change in the registration periods for adults and children. Also, the figures do not include patients attending the Dental Access Centres, which opened during the period, and whose patients are not registered.

3. Registrations are included in the area of the dentist. The registration rates for some areas may be affected by some patients receiving their dental treatment in a different area from the one in which they live.

4. Patients wishing to register with a GDS dentist can obtain details of dentists accepting new patients in their area by contacting NHS Direct.

NHS Trusts (Accommodation Sales)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospital trusts which have sold accommodation on their sites to housing associations; and on what terms. [96094]

Mr. Lammy: We do not collect this information. The Department encourages the national health service to work with housing associations and other registered social landlords to provide a range of affordable, suitably located staff accommodation.

Trusts are encouraged to lease their residential accommodation to housing associations on condition that they maintain it and let to staff on agreed terms, often through legally binding nomination rights which benefit staff.

NICE

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list each appraisal and guidance issued by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence and its cost to the NHS. [89651]

Ms Blears: Information of all appraisal guidance issued by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) with estimates of its cost to the NHS in England, distinguishing between one-off costs and annual recurrent costs has been placed in the Library. These estimates are based on those published by NICE itself; where the original estimate takes the form of a range, a mid-range value has been given.

Similar estimates for clinical guidelines and other forms of guidance from NICE are not available.

Opportunities for All

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure that mainstream programmes and targeted initiatives have (a) a focus on disabled children and young people and (b) targets and indicators monitored as part of Opportunities for All. [96311]

Jacqui Smith: All relevant mainstream health and social care programmes give priority to disabled children.

In 1999 the Government published national objectives for children's social services, as part of the Quality Protects programme to improve children's services. This included specific objectives around disabled children and young people. To help local authorities achieve these objectives, we have earmarked funding for disabled children of £60 million over three years from the children's services special grant.

As part of the development of the children's national service framework, which will set national standards for health and social care, we have prioritised services for disabled children and young people. An external working group has been established to focus on services for disabled children and make recommendations to Ministers on how they could be improved. The three cross-Government programmes for children: Sure Start; the Children's Fund; and Connexions all give priority to supporting disabled children and young people.

The indicators in "Opportunity for all" are used to monitor progress in relation to the Government's strategy to tackle poverty and social exclusion. They have been selected to capture the multidimensional nature of poverty and to utilise the best available information. The indicators meet certain criteria, one of which is to be outcome focused rather than concentrating of inputs and process. All of the indicators are linked to departmental public service agreement targets, which are reviewed as part of spending review cycles.

Organ Donors

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment has been made of the increased numbers of potential donors who have joined the organ donor register as a result of being asked to do so by the inclusion of a leaflet with their electoral registration form; what plans he has to confer with the Home Secretary to expand his initiative further; and if he will make a statement. [96205]

Mr. Lammy: In 2000, my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Health and the then Home Secretary, my right hon. Friend the Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) wrote jointly to the chairmen of the association of electoral administrators and SOLACE'S electoral matters panel, inviting them to encourage their members to distribute organ donor leaflets via the electoral canvass.

The Home Secretary has no powers to direct electoral registrations officers to send out non-electoral material. However, the aim is to encourage councils to join this initiative, which demonstrates how effective a truly local appeal can be. The scheme has already proved successful in many areas and we believe that it owes its success to the fact that it is locally inspired and embraces the local community spirit.

Palliative Care

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for palliative care consultants in each strategic health authority area in England. [96100]

Jacqui Smith: The three-month vacancy rate for palliative care consultants in England has dropped from 7.4 per cent. in March 2001 to 5.2 per cent. in March 2002.

The table shows three-month vacancy rates for palliative care consultants in each strategic health authority in England.

Three months vacancy:
[1] Three month vacancy information is as at 31 March 2002
[2] Three month vacancies which trust are actively trying to fill, which had lasted for three months (whole time equivalents)
[3] Three month vacancy rates are three month vacancies expressed as a percentage of three month vacancies plus staff in post
[4] Three month vacancy rates are calculated using staff in post from the Consultant Census, March 2002
[5] Percentages are rounded to one decimal place
[6] Figures where sum of staff in post and vacancies is less than 10
[7] Figures where sum of staff in post and vacancies is zero.
Staff in post:
[1] Staff in post data is from the Mini Consultant Census, March 2002
[2] Staff in post data excludes staff employed by Health Authorities, as vacancy information was only collected from Trusts, PCTs and Special Health Authorities
[3] Figures where staff in post is five or less and greater than zero.
[4] Figures where staff in post is zero.
General Notes:
[1] Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest whole number
[2] Calculating the vacancy rates using the above data may not equal the actual vacancy rates.

Parliamentary Questions

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will answer questions ref. 87472, 87577, 89363, 89355, 89359, 89362, 89354, 89393 from the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham. [96087]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that the Minister of State, Department of Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Barrow and Furness (Mr. Hutton) gave on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 133W and column 134W, and to the replies that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health, my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) gave on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 126W, 29 January 2003, Official Report, columns 903–04W and 3 February 2003, Official Report, columns 102–03W. Replies were sent on Tuesday 4 February and Wednesday 5 February to the remaining questions.

Performance Bonuses

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid out in bonus payments and to how many civil servants in 2001–02 related to performance in his Department. [96116]

Mr. Lammy: In the period 1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002, the Department paid a total of £397,600 in performance bonus payments to 782 staff.

All bonus payments are performance related.

Primary Movement Exercise Programmes

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of primary movement exercise programmes. [93588]

Mr. Miliband: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Member to the reply I gave on 28 January, Official Report, column 780W.

Renal Patients

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has evaluated on the impact of the availability of choice of immuno suppressive agents on short and long-term outcomes for renal patients; what plans he has to allow the National Service Framework on Renal Services to enable access to choice and tailored treatment for each patient; and if he will make a statement. [97178]

Mr. Lammy: We have asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to establish the clinical and cost-effectiveness of immunosuppressive regimens with regard to initial maintenance, acute rejection therapy in renal transplantion.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many units in the UK routinely carry out asystolic kidney organ donor operations; what plans he has to increase the number of units who carry out such operations; and if he will make a statement; [96134]

(2) what research has been carried out to compare the cost of sustaining a patient on dialysis whilst waiting for a kidney organ transplant to the cost of increasing the number of asystolic kidney donor operations; and if he will make a statement. [96204]

Mr. Lammy: Successful transplantation of donor kidneys is by far the most clinically effective and cost-effective treatment for suitable patients with established renal failure. The average cost of maintaining a heamodialysis patient is estimated at £34,500 per annum, compared with £20,000 for the first year of a cadaveric kidney transplant and £6,500 per annum after the first year. Survival data from three transplants units show that the medium term outcomes of successful transplantation of non-heartbeating donor kidneys are as good as heartbeating donor transplants.

In 2001–02 and 2002–03, UK Transplant funded seven national health service trusts to increase the number of non-heartbeating donor transplants.

Renal Services Framework

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he plans to include in the National Service Framework on Renal Services (a) patient care pathways, from dialysis to transplantation, (b) long-term follow up clinics and (c) screening of key indicators, to include blood pressure and blood lipids; and if he will make a statement; [96199]

(2) if he plans to include guidelines to ensure patient access to transplantation services for the National Service Framework on Renal Services; and if he will make a statement; [96132]

(3) when the National Service Framework on Renal Services will be published; whether resources will be committed to ensure its implementation; and if he will make a statement; [96133]

(4) what plans he has to include standards for increasing organ donor numbers in the renal National Service Framework; whether this will include raising awareness of options including living related Donors; and if he will make a statement. [96198]

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the National Service Framework on Renal Services will include guidelines to ensure patient access to transplantation services; [96385]

(2) whether the National Service Framework on Renal Services will be published in 2003; and if he will make a statement on the resources to be committed to ensure its implementation; [96384]

(3) whether the National Service Framework on Renal Services will include standards for increasing organ donor numbers, with particular reference to the Awareness of Living Related Donors Scheme; [96383]

(4) whether the National Service Framework on Renal Services will include patient care pathways from dialysis to transplantation, including provision for long-term follow-up clinics and screening of key indicators; [96388]

(5) whether the National Service Framework on Renal Services will include (a) information on (i) improving long term graft outcomes, (ii) maximising rejection prevention and (iii) minimising side-effects associated with anti-rejection drugs and (b) standards on providing information to patients on (A) treatment options, (B) survival rates and (C) outcomes; [96386]

(6) whether the National Service Framework on Renal Services will enable access to a choice of immunosuppressive agents to allow tailored treatment for patients. [96387]

Mr. Lammy: The renal national service framework (NSF) will be published in due course. It will set national standards and provide a national direction for renal services that will need to be achieved over 10 years. There will be flexibility at local level to plan to meet local priorities and to use local innovation within the framework of the national standards.

The issues of increasing and raising awareness of organ donation and access to transplantation services are within the scope of the renal NSF and will be considered fully during the NSF development process. Consideration will also be given to the patient care pathway and to the prevention and treatment of chronic kidney disease.

Ritalin

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the level of prescribing of Ritalin to children diagnosed with manic depression. [96639]

Jacqui Smith: We do not collect information on the prescribing levels of drugs for particular disorders. Amphetamines and related drugs, e.g. Ritalin, are specifically contra-indicated for the treatment of depression. Ritalin is therefore not an accepted treatment for manic depression.

Social Services Inspectorate

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposal to include the Social Services Inspectorate within the Council for Health Improvement. [97041]

Jacqui Smith: The Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) will not be merging with the Commission for Health Improvement.

However from 2004 onwards, a new inspectorate for social care, the Commission for Social Care Inspection will be set up, subject to legislation. The new inspectorate will bring together the functions of the SSI and the social care functions of the National Care Standards Commission.

Surgical Instruments (Sterilisation)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with (a) the Health Minister in the Scottish Executive and (b) the British Medical Association regarding the sterilisation of surgery instruments. [96051]

Ms Blears: Officials in the Department have regular working level contacts with Scottish Executive officials to discuss matters of shared interest, including decontamination and the sterilisation of surgical instruments. Neither Ministers nor officials have had recent discussions with the British Medical Association to discuss decontamination, although officials do have discussions about decontamination with the medical and surgical Royal Colleges from time to time.

Vehicle Fleet

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the annual rate is at which his Department renews its vehicle fleet, by (a) volume and percentage for each category of vehicle, (b) type of power unit and (c) type of fuel; and what progress has been made on the replacement of vehicles on a lower emissions basis in each of the last three years. [96561]

Mr. Lammy: The Department operates a fleet of 132 vehicles. Of this figure, 73 are petrol, 58 are diesel and one is liquid petroleum gas (LPG).

The fleet has recently changed from leasing to purchasing vehicles. The annual rate at which the Department renews its vehicles under the existing lease scheme is three years to a maximum of five. The rate at which it renews its purchased vehicles is four years. The vehicle choice is restricted by the Department for Work and Pensions' other Government Department contract, which we also use. The driver makes choices for new vehicles from an approved choice list.

We have vehicles ranging in engine size from 1400 cc. to no larger than 2400 cc. The lowest emissions figure is 157g/km. and the highest is 220g/km. The average emissions figure for the fleet is 168g/km.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Adult Day Centres

David Davis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the charging arrangements are for handicapped persons attending adult day centres in (a) the East Riding of Yorkshire and (b) England. [96705]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

The East Riding of Yorkshire Council charges a flat rate of £2 per day for persons attending adult day centres. I understand that this will cease from April 2003. Thereafter, charges will reflect each individual's ability to pay.

The Department issued statutory guidance, Fairer Charging Policies for Home Care and other non-residential Social Services, in November 2001, which councils in England are obliged to implement.

A copy of the guidance is available at www.doh.gov.uk/scg/homecarecharges.

Affordable Accommodation

Ms Karen Buck: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many units of affordable accommodation were secured via the planning process; and what proportion of all housing permissions this represented in each of the last five years in each local authority in London. [96898]

Mr. McNulty: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of affordable dwellings secured through the planning system for each London borough is shown in the following table:

Local authority	2000–01	2001–02
Barking and Dagenham	106	56

Information about the number of dwellings which all extant housing planning permissions could yield is not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Prior to 2000–01 information about dwellings secured through planning policy was also not collected centrally.

Council Tax

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance he gives to local authorities to reclaim council tax through (a) an attachment to earnings for those people who refuse to pay their council tax and (b) an attachment to pensions for those pensioners who refuse to pay their council tax; and what discussions he has had with the Department of Work and Pensions regarding the attachment to pensions for those pensioners who refuse to pay council tax. [97415]

Mr. McNulty: Since its establishment on 29 May 2002, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has issued no guidance on these matters. Previously the former Department of the Environment published in September 1993 "Council Tax Practice Note No 9—Recovery and Enforcement" which includes guidance on attachment of earnings for council tax debt. Since then the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's predecessors have issued three circular information letters in 1998, 1999 and 2000 to local authorities containing further advice on attachment of earnings.

The Institute of Revenues, Rating and Valuation publication "Council Tax Law and Practices" also contains advice on attachment of earnings for council tax debt. This is based on the Council Tax Practice note.

Pensions are not attachable for council tax debt. No discussions with the Department of Work and Pensions about this matter have been undertaken.

Disabled Facilities Grants

Diana Organ: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he intends to raise the £25,000 ceiling on disabled facilities grants; and if he will make a statement. [97246]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to raise the limit for mandatory Disabled Facilities Grant which was last raised from £20,000 to £25,000 in January 2002. The Regulatory Reform (Housing Assistance)(England and Wales) Order 2002 gives local authorities a new wide ranging discretionary power which allows them to provide additional financial assistance for housing adaptations. This includes the ability to help with the purchase of a new property for the disabled person if this is a more cost-effective option than the adaptation of the existing property.

Fire Dispute

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he last met the Secretary of State for Scotland to discuss the progress of the fire dispute in Scotland. [95975]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister meets with the Secretary of State for Scotland on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues, including the fire dispute.

The Fire Service is a devolved matter in Scotland. My colleagues and I have been in frequent contact with colleagues in the Scottish Executive Justice Department. I last spoke to the Deputy Minister for Justice, Scottish Executive on Tuesday 4 February.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will not amend the Scotland Act 1998 as part of his proposed legislation on fire service pay and conditions. [95976]

Mr. Raynsford: The UK Government have no such plans. The Fire Service is a devolved matter in Scotland. The UK Government are committed, under the Sewel Convention, to legislate on devolved matters at Westminster only with the agreement of the Scottish Parliament. Scottish Ministers share the UK Government's view that this dispute can and should be resolved through UK-wide negotiations.

David Davis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what income has been received by the Department from firefighter employers as a result of the recent fire strikes; [96716]

(2) how much money has been transferred between the Department and the Ministry of Defence as a result of the fire strikes, broken down by category; [96724]

(3) what the budget shortfall incurred by the Department is to date as a result of the fire strikes; and what budget cuts will be made to compensate for this shortfall; [96715]

(4) what the total cost incurred by the Government as a result of the fire strikes has been. [96723]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will pay money to the Ministry of Defence and receive income from firefighter employers on the basis of invoices for services provided and pay deducted as a result of the fire dispute. No money has been paid or received as yet.

It is estimated that the cost to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to the end of January of providing emergency cover for the fire dispute will be about £70 million. Each extra day the military remains ready to provide cover costs up to about £1 million. The figures are necessarily approximate estimates and will remain so until invoices are received and audited. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has a three year spending programme and will be aiming to balance its spending commitments within resources available in the light of events.

Fire Service

Mr. Watts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Bain report took into account past efficiency and modernisation measures that have been introduced by some fire authorities. [93421]

Mr. Raynsford: The Independent Review of the Fire Service described examples of modernisation already in place in some fire brigades, but stated that implementation was patchy. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister wants to see effective modernisation implemented across the whole fire service.

Mr. Watts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he estimates the recommendations of the Bain report will change the quality of the fire service to the community. [93423]

Mr. Raynsford: The Independent Review of the Fire Service, led by Sir George Bain, set out proposals for the reform of the Fire Service. The Government believe that reform will create a Fire Service that is better, safer and will save more lives. The Government will respond in detail to the recommendations in the Independent Review in a Fire White Paper later this year.

Mr Watts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, (1) whether he estimates that all fire authorities will have the same opportunity to introduce modernisation procedures; [93424]

(2) how local fire authorities will be able to increase pay of firefighters in cases where they have already introduced many of the changes recommended in the Bain report. [93422]

Mr. Raynsford: The Independent Review of the Fire Service described examples of modernisation already in place in some Fire Brigades, but stated that implementation was patchy. Opportunities to introduce modernisation procedures will, therefore, vary.

The Government will respond in detail to the recommendations in the Independent Review in a Fire White Paper later this year.

As my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister informed the House on 28 January 2003, Official Report, column 729, brigades should not be disadvantaged in any settlement if they have already implemented recognised modernisation procedures.

Fire Service (Shrewsbury)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact his plans for modernisation of the Fire Service would have on Shrewsbury fire station, with particular reference to manning levels. [93114]

Mr. Raynsford: The Independent Review of the Fire Service led by Sir George Bain set out proposals for the reform of the Fire Service. The Government believe that reform will create a Fire Service that is better, safer and will save more lives. The Government will respond in detail to the recommendations in the Independent Review in a Fire White Paper later this year.

The Independent Review recommended a new approach to fire cover, based on a thorough assessment of life threatening risks. Under this new approach, the deployment of firefighters would be for Fire Authorities and Chief Fire Officers to consult on locally, in the light of new advice which the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will issue for consultation in the near future.

Housing (Pendle and Burnley)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many houses in (a) Pendle and (b) Burnley are (i) abandoned, (ii) empty and (iii) unfit. [96595]

Mr. McNulty: Figures on abandonment are not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, preparatory work undertaken in Pendle and Burnley as part of the East Lancashire housing market renewal pathfinder will improve levels of data on a range of issues, including abandonment. Latest reported information on the total number of empty and unfit dwellings is presented as follows:

Numbers of vacant and unfit dwellings as at 1 April 2002

	Vacant dwellings	Unfit dwellings
Burnley	3,446	9,336
Pendle	2,093	4,290

Housing Corporation

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the administrative costs of the Housing Corporation were for 2001–02. [95621]

Mr. McNulty: The amount of expenditure incurred by the Housing Corporation on administration in 2001–02 was £34.1 million. The corporation's administrative budget in the current year was originally set at £34.16 million.

Housing Policy

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans there are to review housing policy to meet the needs of disabled children. [96313]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has already introduced a number of policies which will help to meet the needs of disabled children. On 10 February I announced a substantial increase in next year's budget for Disabled Facilities Grant to £99 million, an increase of £11 million over this year. Jointly with the Department of Health, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister also issued new draft guidance on how a housing adaptations service for disabled people can be more effectively delivered by local authorities.

Under the Regulatory Reform (Housing Assistance) (England and Wales) Order 2002 local authorities now have a new discretionary power which will enable financial assistance to be given to help a disabled person purchase another home, where this is more cost-effective than adapting the existing home.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister also has a target to ensure that by 2010 all houses in the social sector are of a decent standard and to increase the proportion of vulnerable households in the private sector who live in decent housing.'Vulnerable' has been defined to include families with disabled children.

Recent changes to building regulations mean that new houses must now be designed to manage more easily the needs of a family which includes a disabled person.

The Supporting People programme, which goes live on 1 April 2003, will also help to ensure that the housing related support needs of households with disabled children are appropriately met.

Local Government Funding

Gregory Barker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to meet a cross-party delegation from East Sussex county council to discuss the Local Government Finance settlement for the county; [96261]

(2) which local authorities he met to discuss the local government funding formula (a) prior to and (b) since the announcement of the Local Government Finance settlement for 2003–04. [96255]

Mr. Raynsford: Since the beginning of the Formula Grant Review consultation period on 8 July, the following local authorities, groups and associations have been met as part of stated consultation periods:

Formula Grant Review Consultation (prior to the announcement of the provisional settlement on the 5 December)

Association of North East Councils

No authorities have been met since the announcement of the Final Settlement on 5 February 2003 to discuss the local government funding formula.

East Sussex met with the Minister of State, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Mrs. Roche) on 14 January 2003 as part of the local government finance settlement consultation. There are currently no further plans to meet with them.

North West Regional Assembly

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the North West Regional Assembly's Sandings inquiry into the view of the public in the North West on elected regional government has received central Government funding. [97227]

Mr. Raynsford: The North West Regional Assembly are not undertaking a soundings inquiry. As with other organisations in the region, the North West Regional Assembly has been invited to respond to the Government's soundings exercise. No specific funding has been provided for this purpose.

Parish Councillors

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers district monitoring officers have in respect of suspending parish councillors from their duties. [97200]

Mr. Leslie: Monitoring officers of district councils do not have any such powers, which under the Local Government Act 2000 lie with case tribunals formed by members of the Adjudication Panel, or may, by regulations be conferred on a council's standards committee.

Private Landlords

Lynne Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will publish the results of the consultation on selective licensing of private landlords. [94723]

Mr. McNulty: As announced in the Queen's Speech, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister aims to publish a draft Housing Bill this session. The provisions in the Bill will include powers for local authorities to introduce the selective licensing of private sector landlords targeted primarily at areas of low housing demand. The nature of these proposed powers follows on from the consultation exercise in late 2001.

The draft Bill will itself be subject to further public consultation and parliamentary scrutiny.

Regional Government

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the role of existing regional assemblies in the Government's soundings exercise on the future of elected regional government; and what (a) guidance he has issued to and (b) requirements he has placed upon regional assemblies to maintain their impartiality in the exercise. [97198]

Mr. Raynsford: On 2 December 2002, the Government issued a soundings paper inviting views, information and evidence on the level of interest in each region in holding a referendum about an elected assembly. This paper was sent to the eight regional chambers, as well as local authorities, MPs, MEPs and others in the English regions outside London.

The soundings paper advises all respondents that the information they provide will be strengthened if they can demonstrate that they have consulted widely. The paper also makes it clear that opinion polls, in order to be considered by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister, must have been conducted in a way likely to generate a fair and representative outcome.

Regional chambers may use Government grant to develop their responses to the soundings exercise. But the funding agreements issued to the chambers or their accountable bodies make clear that Government grant cannot be used for political activities, such as campaigning for elected regional assemblies.

Right to Buy

David Davis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many tenants have used the Right to Buy scheme to purchase property in each local authority in each year since 1 May 1997. [96717]

Mr. McNulty: The information collected relates to the number of dwellings sold under the Right to Buy legislation.

Tables showing reported information on Right to Buy sales and other council house disposals by each local authority in England, along with national and regional summaries, for each year since 1979–80 are available in the Library of the House.

Sawmill Industrial Estate, Alnwick

Mr. Beith: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to determine the planning application in respect of a supermarket on the Sawmill Industrial Estate, Alnwick. [96495]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister received the Inspector's report in respect of a planning application for a supermarket in Alnwick on 7 January 2003. The application is on the Willis Garage site which is adjacent to the Sawmill Industrial Estate. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister aims to make a decision as soon as possible.

Unfair Terms Regulations

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on how the DTLR publication Independent Tenant Advisers and Stock Transfers-A Good Practice Guide by Barbara Carlisle and Michael Wagstaff deals with the implications of the Unfair Terms Regulations 1999 for the independent tenant adviser; and what the cost was of this document. [96567]

Mr. McNulty: Chapter 10 of the Independent Tenant Advisors and Stock Transfers good practice guidance provides guidance on how the Independent Tenant Advisor can work with the local authority to ensure tenants have the information they need about the proposed stock transfer and provide impartial advice on tenancy agreements, rent levels and future rent guarantees. However it does not make specific reference to the Unfair Terms Regulations 1999. The guide was produced as a free publication.

Ms Bridget Prentice: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action has been taken by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to encourage all sections of the housing industry to comply with the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999. [96570]

Mr. McNulty: The Director General of Fair Trading and a number of other regulators are responsible for the enforcement of these regulations. The Office of Fair Trading published guidance on unfair terms in tenancy agreements for the private rented sector in November 2001. All sections of the housing industry are advised to take full account of their guidance and the need to comply with the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations in their contractual arrangements with consumers.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Animal Welfare

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what mechanisms have been put in place to ensure the effective registration of livestock hauliers and the inspection of their operations in relation to the welfare of the livestock. [97125]

Mr. Morley: The Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997 (WATO), as amended, requires that any person transporting cattle, sheep, goats, pigs or horses on journeys of over eight hours by road, or by air, rail or sea must be specifically authorised. A specific authorisation is issued only after checks that the applicant is a fit and proper person to transport animals. A total of 947 specific authorisations have been issued in Great Britain to hauliers and other transporters since 1 October 1997. Full information about WATO is available on the internet at: www.defra.gov.uk

Compliance by livestock hauliers with WATO is generally monitored by enforcement agents at livestock markets, ports and during roadside vehicle checks. We are currently piloting a new agreement for animal health and welfare with enforcement agencies, which is intended to provide more consistent and improved enforcement.

For export journeys with farmed livestock, route plans showing the route and duration of the journey are checked before and after the journey for compliance with permitted maximum journey times and rest, feed and watering requirements. The European Commission are considering improvements to the monitoring of these rules and better communication between member states to ensure rapid reporting of problems.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the reclassification of animals as sentient beings under European law and its implications for the welfare of animals. [97128]

Mr. Morley: In 1997 we successfully negotiated a Protocol to the Treaty of Rome that recognises animals as sentient beings. This requires the European Union and the member states to pay full regard to the welfare requirements of animals, in formulating and implementing the Community's agriculture, transport, internal market and research policies.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action the Government are taking to end the use of (a) veal crates and (b) battery cages across Europe. [97131]

Mr. Morley: The Government are committed to improving animal welfare on an EU basis. EU Directive 99/74/EC bans the barren battery cage across Europe from 1 January 2012; Directive 97/2/EC bans veal crates in the EU from 31 December 2006.

Badgers

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many badger groups were relocated at (a) the cost of residents and (b) public expense in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [95944]

Mr. Morley: (a) One; and (b) None.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs in what circumstances badgers can be removed from urban areas to prevent (a) danger to the badgers and (b) nuisance to householders; and what controls can be used to prevent badgers digging setts in residential areas. [95945]

Mr. Morley: Under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992 it is an offence to take a badger except in certain circumstances. For instance, a person is not guilty of an offence if he takes a badger that has been disabled otherwise than by his action for the purpose of tending the animal. The licensing provisions in the Act enable English Nature to grant a licence, among other things, to take a specified number of badgers for the purpose of conservation of badgers. In addition, the Act enables Defra to grant a licence to take a badger for the purpose, among other things, of preventing serious damage to property.

Defra's Rural Development Service provides practical guidance on preventing problems arising from the presence of badgers in residential areas. Advice may be obtained from the National Wildlife Administration Unit, telephone number 0845 601 4523 (local rate). The RDS publishes a leaflet, "Badger Problems: Advice to Householders", available on request, or via the Department's web site.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what impact the 20 day livestock movement restrictions have had upon the control of the spread of bovine TB. [96956]

Mr. Morley: Any limitation on the movement of cattle, such as the 20 day livestock movement restrictions, reduces the opportunity for TB infection to be brought onto herds. However, limiting movement alone is not sufficient as a TB control measure. Defra has advised farmers that they must take responsibility for ensuring they are aware of the TB status of animals brought onto farms, and that they should buy only from herds with up-to-date TB tests.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the prospects for the development of a vaccine for bovine TB. [96957]

Mr. Morley: Over the last twelve months the Vaccine Scoping Study Sub-Committee of the Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB (ISG) has met regularly to consider the feasibility for pursuing a TB vaccination strategy for cattle or wildlife, and to advise on future research requirements. A report to Ministers is expected in the spring.

The ISG has cautioned that a TB vaccine is a potential policy option only in the longer term.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects the Scientific Committee overseeing the Krebs Trials into the spread of bovine TB (a) to complete its field work and (b) to publish its findings. [96958]

Mr. Morley: The Independent Scientific Group on Cattle TB (ISG) has advised that the work associated with the badger culling trial should be completed and reported during 2006. This is a three to four month extension following the suspension of field operations during the Foot and Mouth Disease (FMD) outbreak. However, the ISG are reviewing the effect of the FMD outbreak on the badger culling trial, and expect to provide further advice to Ministers on the likely completion date in the spring of this year.

Electricity Charges

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what changes in unit payments for electricity have resulted from the switch by her Department to purchasing renewable energy which is exempt from the Climate Change Levy. [96489]

Mr. Morley: For the year 2001–02, the actual average price was 4.88 p/kWh for green energy purchased for the Defra Estate and 4.21 p/kWh for Defra Laboratories. Actual average price for normal electricity was 5.87 p/kWn and 4.16 p/kWh respectively. This shows that there was a reduction in the average price paid of 3.94 per cent. for the Defra Estate and an increase of 0.20 per cent. for Defra Laboratories.

Environmental Protection

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to her answer of 31 January 2003, Official Report, column 1077W, on the Environment Agency, how many staff in each year were allocated to environmental protection matters; and how much of the budget in each year was allocated to environmental protection matters. [96519]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency's environmental protection function covers: water quality, waste regulation, integrated pollution control, integrated pollution prevention and control, radioactive substances regulation and land quality.

The Agency took up its statutory duties on 1 April 1996. The allocation of staff and budgets to environmental protection as at the year ending 31 March was as follows:

	Budget (£ million)	Full-time equivalent staff
1997	169.6	3,923
1998	182.1	3,852
1999	194.0	4,027
2000	204.6	4,369
2001	221.2	4,540
2002	222.8	4,504
2003	234.5	4,645(planned)

The staff figures are expressed as full-time equivalents. An allocation of full-and part-time costs according to function could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Water Directive

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on those aspects of the EU Water Framework Directive's Common Implementation Strategy Guidance which will be piloted in the UK; [R] [96619]

(2) what resources will be made available to ensure that the UK pilot river basin study of the Ribble is (a) comprehensive and (b) fully compatible with the requirements of the EU Water Framework Directive's common implementation strategy. [R] [96618]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency has already confirmed that it will undertake a UK pilot river basin project on the Ribble to test out the CIS guidance on public participation. To date the Agency has committed a full-time project manager, operational staff in the North West Region and staff from its national Water Framework Directive Programme to help deliver the pilot river basin project. This work will inform and support subsequent implementation work the Agency will be required to carry out as "competent authority" for the Directive.

Fallen Stock (Burial Licences)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many licences have been issued in the last 12 months to enable farmers to bury fallen stock on their farms. [96011]

Mr. Morley: None. There are currently no requirements for farmers to obtain a licence to bury fallen stock on their farms.

Farm Animal Movement

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to end the 20-day standstill rule on movement of farm animals. [96010]

Mr. Morley: We announced in a Written Statement on 23 January that—subject to satisfactory further consultation with the livestock industry—we intend to reduce the standstill for cattle, sheep and goats to six days with effect from 4 March 2003. I refer the hon. Member to the Written Statement of 23 January 2003, Official Report, columns 20–24WS.

A supporting document explaining our decision has been placed in the Library and published on the Defra website.

Flooding

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she last met the chairman and chief executive of the Environment Agency concerning flooding; and when she next plans to do so. [96125]

Mr. Morley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets with the Environment Agency regularly to discuss a range of issues. The last time she met Sir John Harman and Baroness Young to discuss flooding was on 15 January 2003. I also hold meetings with the Environment Agency and flooding is discussed regularly. Our last meeting was held on 9 December 2002 and I am due to meet with them again on 6 March 2003.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many calls, broken down by constituency in Somerset, were received by the Environment Agency's (a) flooding hotline and (b) website in (i) December 2002 and (ii) January 2003. [96496]

Mr. Morley: It is not possible to provide the statistics requested broken down by constituency. The table below is an indication of the number of Floodline callers accessing the Recorded Message Service Boxes (areas) for the Somerset Region. Please note the callers may not necessarily have been calling from Somerset (i.e. people checking on holiday homes or about to visit the area from outside).

As it is impossible to determine the geographical location within the UK of someone seeking information from a website, we cannot provide details of individual web users.

The river Tone and Tributaries	51	300	351
The rivers Axe, Brue, Congresbury Yeo and Sheppy	35	94	129
The Somerset Moors	19	49	68

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) calls the Environment Agency's flooding hotline received and (b) hits the Environment Agency's flooding website received from 25 December 2002 to 7 January 2003. [96123]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency's Floodline service received 121,663 calls, and there were 117,637 individual users on their Flood Warning website between 25 December 2002 and 6 January 2003. The Agency's website suffered problems in its service between 1–6 January. This was primarily because of the excessive load during that period and in spite of previous testing to ensure that flood incident loads could be met. A number of technical changes have now been carried out to improve the site's performance.

Foot and Mouth

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the largest single amount of compensation paid out to a claimant for smoke damage to their property was as a result of foot and mouth disease disposal methods. [96228]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The largest single amount of compensation paid out to a claimant for smoke damage as a result of foot and mouth disease disposal methods in England and Wales is £2,339.

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many people have received compensation for smoke damage as a result of foot and mouth disease disposal methods in England and Wales. [96235]

Mr. Morley: There have been payments made to 15 claimants for smoke damage as a result of foot and mouth disease disposal methods in England and Wales.

Forest Enterprise South West

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what grants are available to Forest Enterprise South West to put their forestry plans on the internet for local public consultation. [96234]

Mr. Morley: Forest Enterprise does not publish its forest design plans on the internet. However, the Forestry Commission maintains a "Register of New Planting and Felling", which it publishes on its website http://www.forestry.gov.uk/consultations. The register gives information on new planting and felling applications received from private woodland owners and information about Forest Enterprise design plans.

Indoor Air Pollution

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research her Department has undertaken on sources of indoor air pollution. [96310]

Alun Michael: The Department has no responsibilities for the sources of air pollutants within buildings and has therefore not undertaken any research on this topic.

Internal Drainage Boards

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment her Department has made of how internal drainage boards are exercising their duty under the Land Drainage Act 1994 to further the conservation and enhancement of natural beauty and the conservation of flora, fauna and geological or physiographical features of special interest. [96400]

Mr. Morley: The Government currently assess the conservation performance of Internal Drainage Boards in a number of ways.

Firstly, each flood and coastal defence scheme currently submitted by an Internal Drainage Board (IDE) for Defra grant-aid is assessed not only for its economic and technical robustness, but also its environmental compliance. To assist in making a judgment on the acceptability of each submission, English Nature is asked for an opinion on the environmental compliance of all grant applications that are processed. The improved access to in-house conservation advice that several IDB consortia now have is a welcome step that is improving the ability to take advantage of the environmental opportunities presented by many flood management schemes.

Secondly, High Level Targets 9 and 10, which are set for all operating authorities, relate to conservation of the environment.

In addition to meeting statutory obligations when carrying out flood and coastal defence works, HLT 9 requires that IDBs must aim to avoid damage to environmental interest; ensure there is no net loss to habitats covered by Biodiversity Action Plans; and seek opportunities for environmental enhancement. IDBs are required to report annually to the Environment Agency on all losses and gains of habitats covered by Biodiversity Action Plans. The last report to be published by Defra was on 24 May 2002. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, North (Mr. Hopkins), on 24 May 2002, Official Report, columns 641–42W.

High Level Target 10 relates specifically to Water Level Management Plans (WLMPs), which are required for wetlands of recognised importance for nature conservation. The target was revised in January 2001 so that each operating authority, including all IDBs, must provide to Defra and the Environment Agency:

a definite timetable for completing any outstanding WLMPs; and an outline timetable for preparing a programme for implementing and reviewing WLMPs.

In addition, each operating authority must have in place a detailed programme for implementing and reviewing WLMPs for European sites and Ramsar sites by 1 April 2002 and other SSSIs by 1 April 2003.

In line with these revisions, all operating authorities are required to make an annual report to Defra of their progress in implementing and reviewing WLMPs against their published programme. The last report to be published by Defra was in August 2002. I refer the hon. Member to the my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rhondda (Mr. Bryant) on 29 October 2002, Official Report, columns 732–33W.

As the majority of WLMPs have now been written, the emphasis has now moved to implementation and it is pleasing to report that one of the largest applications for grant-aid to implement WLMP actions was made on behalf of an IDB consortia.

While it must be recognised that IDBs primarily provide a local land drainage service, it is also recognised that there is room for improving their environmental performance. Further steps to address this are one of the aspects under consideration in the Flood and Coastal Defence Funding Review, on which I will shortly be making a statement.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many landfill operators have submitted a conditioning plan to the Environmental Agency; and how many have applied to be classed as (a) hazardous, (b) non-hazardous and (c) inert. [96965]

Mr. Meacher: Information from the Environment Agency's conditioning plan exercise, covering England and Wales, is as follows:

Region	Non-hazardous	Inert	Hazardous (post 2002)	Hazardous (post 2004)
Anglian	43	60	47	9
Midlands	50	74	42	4

Market Towns Initiative

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what funding has been given to the Bury St. Edmunds constituency under the market towns initiative. [97386]

Alun Michael: None. Bury St. Edmunds itself is considerably above the 25,000 population size limit set for inclusion in the Market Towns Initiative, and none of the other towns in the Bury St. Edmunds constituency is currently included.

Mercury Contamination

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on mercury emissions from UK power stations. [97518]

Alun Michael: The following table shows total estimated UK emissions of mercury from all sources up to 2001 (the latest date for which figures are available). The estimated emission of mercury to air from UK power generation in 2001 was 1.65 tonnes, representing 19 per cent. of total UK mercury emissions. Total emissions have fallen by 72 per cent. (from 31.6 tonnes to 8.8 tonnes) since 1990. Mercury emissions from power stations have fallen by 80 per cent. (from 8.36 tonnes to 1.65 tonnes), over the same period.

National Atmospheric Emissions Inventor

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the environmental impact of mercury emissions from UK power stations. [97519]

Alun Michael: Mercury emissions from UK power stations have fallen by some 80 per cent. (from 8.36 tonnes/annum to 1.65 tonnes/annum) since 1990.

The Environment Agency carried out dispersion modelling of the impact of mercury emissions from UK power stations in 1996. The impact as a result of the concentrations attributed to the power stations was found to be insignificant. The Environment Agency will however keep the question of emissions under review as alternative fuel sources became available/viable.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the accepted maximum levels of mercury in the environment are. [97520]

Alun Michael: There is no acceptable maximum level of mercury in the environment. To protect against direct human inhalation, the World Health Organisation (WHO), recommends a guideline level of 1 microgramme per cubic metre for inorganic mercury vapour in air. However due to the fact that mercury has been shown to bioaccumulate in its toxic, methylated form in the environment, particularly in the aquatic food chain, the WHO recommends that ambient levels of mercury in air should be kept as low as possible.

Environmental quality standards (EQSs) for mercury in the aquatic environment are set out in List I of the Dangerous Substances Directive (DSD) (76/464/EEC) and the Surface Water (Dangerous Substances) (Classification) Regulations (1989) as 1 nanogramme per litre for freshwater and 0.3 nanogrammes per litre for saltwater. Mercury discharges are also covered by daughter directives of the DSD (82/176/EEC and 84/156/EEC).

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which UK rivers or lakes are tested for contamination with mercury; and what the results of these surveys were in the last year for which information is available. [97521]

Mr. Morley: This information is not held centrally and will have to be collated by the Environment Agency. The Agency has advised that it should be able to provide a comprehensive answer during March. I will arrange for the information to be placed in the Library of the House, and will notify the hon. Member when it is available.

Pig Industry

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total Government marketing funding for the pig industry was in (a) 2000–01, (b) 2001–02 and (c) 2002–03. [96274]

Mr. Morley: While it is not Government policy to provide marketing funding for the pig industry, in 2000–01 a one-off payment of £2.65 million was made to the Meat and Livestock Commission (MLC) to help them advertise the "pork mark". This was a campaign to promote welfare friendly pork. No further payments were made in 2001–02 and 2002–03. Livestock and meat marketing, including the pig industry, is one of the functions of the MLC, established by the Agriculture Act 1967. The MLC has the general duty of promoting greater efficiency in the livestock products industry.

Responsible Pet Ownership

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the development of dog registration and education programmes for responsible pet ownership. [97134]

Mr. Morley: At present Defra has no funds available to implement the recommendations set out in the Dog Identification Group's "Report on the Permanent Identification of Dogs". However, the Government produce guidance, and encourage responsible dog ownership through leaflets. Information can be found on the Defra website.

The legislation relating to the welfare of captive and domestic animals is currently under review. As part of the review, I am looking to see how responsible pet ownership can be improved so that vendors, buyers and those who are considering buying pet animals are informed about the welfare needs of the animal.

Sudden Oak Death

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether it is her policy to compensate nursery businesses in respect of viburnum and rhododendron stock destroyed to control the spread of the sudden oak death fungal pathogen phytophthora ramorum. [95947]

Mr. Meacher: Compensation is not generally paid for destruction of plants in order to prevent or control the spread of plant pests or diseases. The Plant Health Act 1967 gives a discretion to pay compensation. A claim has recently been made by a grower in respect of action against plants infected with Phytophthora ramorum (the pathogen which is causing Sudden Oak Death in the United States of America). No final decision has been made on this claim. A case is currently before the European Court of Justice on the question of compensation for the destruction of diseased fish. The outcome of that case will be taken into account in reaching a final determination on the issue of compensation.

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs at how many nurseries, broken down by county, viburnum and rhododendron stock has been destroyed to combat the sudden oak death fungal pathogen phytophthora ramorum. [95948]

Mr. Meacher: The table below provides the information requested for England and Wales. Action has also been taken in Scotland, Northern Ireland and the Channel Isles.

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she is taking to combat the spread of the sudden oak death (phytophthora ramorum); and if she will make a statement. [95950]

Mr. Meacher: Defra's Plant Health and Seeds Inspectorate (PHSI) are continuing to survey nurseries and garden centres for symptoms of the disease and are examining established plants and trees in areas close to nurseries and garden centres in which the disease has been found. Substantial resources have been diverted into this work and the associated research programme. Plants moved from other member states or imported from third countries are being monitored to ensure that they meet movement requirements and are not carrying the disease. Any plants found to have the disease are destroyed. The devolved authorities and the Forestry Commission are taking similar action. Research is underway at the Central Science Laboratory and at the Forest Research Agency to assess the risk presented by this disease to a wide range of plants, in particular our native tree species and other native plants. The findings of this research will be used to update the Pest Risk Assessment in order to keep under review the precautionary actions being taken against the spread of this disease.

Waste Directive

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which Department has responsibility for the transposition of the Waste Electrical and Electronic Equipment Directive into UK law. [96412]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

DTI was the lead Department for the negotiations on this Directive and has now started to take forward transposition in close association with DEFRA and other parts of Government.

Waste Disposal

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what additional funding has been made available to the Environment Agency to enable it to (a) detect and (b) prosecute the (i) disposal and (ii) treatment of waste without a licence. [96466]

Mr. Meacher: No specific funds have been made available to detect and prosecute the disposal and treatment of waste without a waste management licence. The Department issues the Agency with a block grant for its environmental protection work (£121 million in 2002–03). It is for the Agency to decide how to prioritise work and expenditure within this, in discussion with the Department. Waste receives the second largest share of Grant In Aid funding.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many prosecutions by the Environment Agency of waste offences involving disposing or treating of waste without a licence there were in each year since 1997. [96468]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency keeps records of breaches to section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The figures in the table show the total incidents of illegally depositing controlled waste on land. The figure for January 2001 to December 2001 shows incidents involving fly tipping only.

Figures are recorded on a financial year basis. In respect of calendar year 2001, Environment Agency records are more precise and the number represents the offenders prosecuted for the section 33(1)(a) offence of unlawfully depositing waste.

	Number of breaches
1996–97	241
1997–98	345
1998–99	367
1999–2000	342
2000–01	439
January to December 2001	234

The number of prosecutions by the Agency of offences committed under section 33(1)(b) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 for illegally treating controlled waste have only been recorded since 1999. The figures in the following table represent the three complete financial years since then:

	Number of prosecutions
1999–2000	37
2000–01	61
2001–02	90

Water Framework Directive

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the role which Internal Drainage Boards will play in delivering the environmental objectives of the EC Water Framework Directive. [96399]

Mr. Morley: The functions of Internal Drainage Boards, including in relation to management of water levels in watercourses and flood defence, may be relevant to meeting the objectives of the Water Framework Directive.

The Government have proposed that the Environment Agency, in its role as competent authority, will given a duty to consult relevant bodies when preparing River Basin Management Plans. In order for the Secretary of State to be sure that the influence of other bodies with relevant functions are fully reflected in the measures and plans, statutory guidance to the Agency will also set out which bodies will need to be involved, and which functions need to be taken into account.

In river basins where Internal Drainage Boards operate, therefore, Boards will be consulted and their functions taken into account in order to achieve the environmental objectives set within each district.

Whales

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's policies on commercial whaling and the proposal for a Southern Ocean whale sanctuary. [97132]

Mr. Morley: The Government are strongly opposed to all whaling other than subsistence whaling by indigenous people. They fully support the International Whaling Commission's moratorium on commercial whaling and works within the IWC to maintain this.

The Government support the maintenance of existing whale sanctuaries in the Southern and Indian Oceans and has cosponsored proposals made by others for the creation of new sanctuaries in the South Pacific and South Atlantic.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the expenditure in England of the Woodland Grant Scheme was in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002 calendar years. [96827]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 February 2003]: The expenditure on all the activities grant aided under the Forestry Commission's Woodland Grant Scheme was as follows:

Year	Total grants (£)
2000	17,215,133
2001	16,517,760
2002	18,042,494

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received concerning the introduction of a single closing date for the next round of the Woodland Grant Scheme for new planting. [96828]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 February 2003]: I have received one representation and this expressed concern about the introduction of a single closing date for new planting applications as announced by the Forestry Commission on 16 December 2002.

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what percentage of applications for the Woodland Grant Scheme for new planting in each of the last three years were from private landowners who had no previous experience of woodland planting. [96831]

Mr. Morley: Previous experience is not a criterion for grant-aid. This information is not, therefore, routinely collected and could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what difficulties were experienced by (a) the Forestry Commission and (b) DEFRA staff with the two closing dates per year for the Woodland Grant Scheme, in each year since 2000. [96861]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission has found that any delays to the processing of grant applications made late in the year could result in applications not being approved in time for implementation during the current planting season. These delays can be for a number of reasons, including the resolution of issues between the Commission and the applicant and resolving items raised during the consultation process. Defra do not process the Woodland Grant Scheme (WGS), but process the associated Farm Woodland Premium Scheme (FWPS). Therefore any delays to a WGS application which has a parallel FWPS application can have a knock on effect within Defra.

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the difficulties with the 31 October deadline were for applicants for the Woodland Grant Scheme referred to by the Forestry Commission in its circular to interested parties dated 16th December 2002. [96862]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 February 2003]: Where there are delays in processing applications submitted late in the year, applicants may receive approval too late in the planting season to undertake the agreed work. A delay may be caused where applications are incomplete or require modification to meet the rules and standards of the Woodland Grant Scheme. Any objections arising from the consultation process have to be resolved, which can also add to the processing time.

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many applicants there were for the Woodland Grant Scheme round for which the closing date was 31 October 2002. [96867]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 February 2003]: 633 applications for new planting were received for the 31 October 2002 closing date.

CABINET OFFICE

Civil Service (Recruitment)

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what action he is taking to increase (a) graduate recruits, (b) recruits from the private sector and (c) recruits from the voluntary sector into the senior civil service; and if he will make a statement. [97600]

Mr. Alexander: The Civil Service is committed to ensuring that it has the right skills and experience at all levels. The service does this both by developing its own staff and by bringing in talent from outside the service including the private and voluntary sectors. In 2001–02 there were 200 posts at SCS level filled by open competition, up from 107 in 1998. Of these 77 (39 per cent.) were filled by civil servants, 86 (43 per cent.) from the broader public sector and 37 (18 per cent.) from the private sector. In addition, the service makes use of expertise from the private and voluntary sector through a programme of interchange, including at SCS level.

The service does not target graduates specifically for recruitment into the senior civil service since we are looking for those who have demonstrated the relevant skills and experience for the particular job. However, graduate recruitment exercises are run at lower levels of the service, both through individual Departments' schemes and the centrally-run fast stream graduate trainee scheme.

TREASURY

Customs (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Customs and Excise in Northern Ireland has received any additional Government funding since 1 April 2002. [97009]

John Healey: Since 1April 2002 additional funding has been made available to Customs to further enhance their efforts in Northern Ireland to help tackle oils fraud and to assure compliance with a range of other taxes including landfill tax, aggregates levy and the climate change levy.

United Kingdom GDP

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the total UK GDP was constituted by (a) business-to-business transactions and (b) business-to-consumer transactions in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002. [97236]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 11 February 2003]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. Jonathon Djanogly, dated 13 February 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning what percentage of total UK GDP was constituted by (a) business-to business transactions and (b) business-to-consumer transactions in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002. (97236)

The National Accounts do not separately identify business-to-business transactions or business-to-consumer transactions.

In the National Accounts only business-to-business transactions on capital items are recorded in GDP. The concept that measures this in the National Accounts is business investment.

Business-to-business transactions, non capital items or intermediate expenditure as it is defined in National Accounts, do not add to GDP as the expenditure and incomes in the buying and selling industries cancel out. The ONS publishes estimates of total intermediate expenditure for the corporate sector, the latest figure available is for 2000.

The table below summarises the available data. Figures are expressed in billion at current prices or as percentages. First estimates for 2002 will be published on 26 February 2003.

	1999	2000	2001
Gross Domestic Product (billion)	902.5	950.4	990.9
Business Investment (billion)	108.2	109.8	112.5
Business Investment as a proportion of GDP (%)	12.0	11.6	11.3
Household expenditure (billion)	569.5	603.6	630.8
Household expenditure as a proportion of GDP (%)	63.1	63.5	63.7
Intermediate expenditure by the corporate sector (billion)	683.5	721.2	Not available

Departmental Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list consultations his Department has conducted since 1997; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed. [97421]

Ruth Kelly: The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation applies to all formal national public consultation documents issued by Departments from 1 January 2001. From that date, full details of consultations conducted by HM Treasury are published on our public website, www.hm-treasury.gov.uk. Our website also lists consultations issued between May and December 2000. A list of consultations from 16 May 2000 to 5 February 2003, the dates launched and the closing dates are given below. Duty Diversion Fraud

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many convictions were secured in cases relating to diversion fraud between 1993 and 2002; and how many of these convictions are considered unsafe because of non-disclosure of relevant material at trial by customs officers. [97368]

John Healey: HM customs and excise does not collate figures for convictions for diversion frauds separately from other prosecutions, and therefore these figures are not readily available. In relation to diversions of goods that originated from London City Bond between 1995 and 1998 during the use of the informants there, I refer to my answers to the hon. Member for Eddisbury (Mr. O'Brien) on 23 January 2003, Official Report, columns 455–457W).

Gold Reserves

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the investments that have been made since 6 July 1999 with the proceeds from sales of gold reserves; and what the value was on 10 February of those investments. [97296]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 11 February 2003]: The proceeds from the sale of part of the United Kingdom's gold holdings, between 6 July 1999 and 6 March 2002, were invested in interest-bearing foreign currency assets in broadly the same proportion as currently held in the net foreign currency reserves (40 per cent. dollars; 40 per cent. euros; 20 per cent. yen). Further information on the investment policy for the foreign currency reserves is detailed in the Exchange Equalisation Account Financial Accounts 2001–02 published on 16 January 2003 (HC 258 Session 2002–03).

Details of the currency breakdown of the United Kingdom's foreign currency reserves are published quarterly, with a lag of two months, on the Bank of England's website-bankofengland.co.uk. The latest data available are for the end September 2002.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he took on investing the proceeds of sale of the gold reserves; and if he will publish that advice. [97297]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 11 February 2003]: The investment policy for the net foreign currency reserves is detailed in the Exchange Equalisation Account Financial Accounts 2001–02 published on 16 January 2003 (HC 258 Session 2002–03). Prior to the decision in 1999 to restructure the reserves portfolio the Bank of England provided advice on the portfolio risks associated with gold and other assets. These portfolio risk issues, and the broader rationale for the restructuring of the reserves portfolio, are discussed in HM Treasury's "Review of the Sale of Part of the UK Gold Reserves" (October 2002)- copies of this document have been placed in the House of Commons Library and it is also available on the Treasury's website-http://www. hm-treasury.gov.uk/media//9EFEF/ GoldReserves.PDF.

Income Tax

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue loss of (a) extending the basic income tax rate bracket to individuals with an annual income of (i) £38,000, (ii) £39,000, (iii) £40,000, (iv) £41,000, (v) £42,000, (vi) £43,000, (vii) £44,000, (viii) £45,000, (ix) £46,000, (x) £47,000, (xi) £48,000, (xii) £49,000 and (xiii) £50,000 and (b) having a starting income tax rate bracket of (i) £0-£2,500, (ii) £0-£3,000, (iii) £0-£3,500, (iv) £0-£4,000, (v) £0-£4,500 and (vi) £0-£5,000. [96995]

Dawn Primarolo: The full year revenue loss from making the changes in 2003–04 is set out in the table.

£ billion

	Starting rate limit on taxable incomes
Basic rate limit on taxable incomes	2,500	3,000	3,500	4,000	4,500	5,000

50,000	-9.1	-10.6	-12.1	-13.6	-15.0	-16.3

The estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and are consistent with the November 2002 pre-Budget report. These estimates exclude any behavioural response to the tax change.

Inheritance Tax

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have applied for conditional exemption from inheritance tax in the last 12 months; and how this tax relief is being amended to take into account the implementation of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000. [96745]

Dawn Primarolo: Eight inheritance tax exemption claims concerning land have been received by the Inland Revenue in the last 12 months. Only one case involves "access land" for the purposes of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000.

As my hon. Friend knows from his longstanding interest in this topic, rights of access are not the only benefits secured for the public by undertakings under the conditional exemption scheme, and the access provided by such undertakings has never been restricted to the matters covered by the Countryside and Rights of Way Act, where it applies. The Inland Revenue and their heritage advisers take full account of the Act's potential application in determining what undertakings they will regard as giving reasonable public access. They find that the conditional exemption scheme is able to secure greater and/or better quality opportunities for access than those afforded by the Countryside and Rights of Way Act, and they will continue to seek such added benefits.

Israel

Richard Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what inquiries are being made by HM Customs and Excise to ascertain whether goods are on sale in British supermarkets which have been imported to the EU under preference according to the EU-Israel Association Agreement but which originate in settlements in the Occupied Territories; [97077]

(2) pursuant to the answer of 4 February 2003, Official Report, column 181W, on Israel, if he will list the imports where verification inquiries are being made by Customs and Excise. [97261]

John Healey: Details of verification inquiries could lead to the identification of individual importers and cannot be disclosed. Exemption 13 (Third party's commercial confidences) of the Code of Conduct on Access to Government Information applies.

Customs and Excise have made no inquiries in supermarkets. They are targeting at the point of import goods where the Israel preference has been claimed but where there is reason to suspect that they may have originated in the Occupied Territories.

Landfill

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the costs to the public sector of (a) salaries and (b) administration arising from his proposed changes to the landfill tax credit scheme. [96150]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

The cost of running the transition scheme announced by my right hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on Monday 3 February Official Report, column 5WS, is expected to be covered by the 2 per cent. of total funding currently used for the cost of administering landfill tax credit scheme. No estimate of the cost of running the new public expenditure programmes has yet been made.

UK Gold Holdings

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount of money realised from the sales of UK gold holdings from 6 July 1999 to 6 March 2002 and what would be the value of that gold at the morning fix on 10 February. [97295]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 11 February 2003]: The proceeds from the sale of 395 tonnes of gold over the period 6 July 1999 to 6 March 2002 were approximately $3.5 billion (around £2.1 billion at the exchange rate at close on 10 February 2003). The price of gold at the morning fix on 10 February 2003 was $371.75 per ounce (32,150.747 ounces = 1 tonne).

VAT Exemptions (Charities)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to extend VAT exemptions for recognised charities. [97907]

John Healey: Charities already benefit from a range of special VAT reliefs worth around 200 million a year. We regularly discuss taxation issues with the charitable sector, and within the bounds of long standing formal agreements with our European partners, we are ready to consider opportunities to modernise and update the VAT system where we can.

DEFENCE

Gibraltar

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the strategic importance of Gibraltar to military intervention in Iraq. [97282]

Mr. Ingram: Gibraltar contains a naval base and other support facilities which are available to support operations in the Mediterranean or middle east.

Afghan-Pakistan Border

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) Lwara and (b) other US positions on the Afghan-Pakistan border have been (i) abandoned and (ii) occupied by al-Qaeda fighters. [96982]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 10 February 2003]: Coalition forces continue to maintain a presence in the Afghanistan-Pakistan border region to counter anti-coalition militants. The location of such forces is a tactical decision taken by the Commander on the ground and determined, among other things, by operational priorities.

Eastern and south-eastern Afghanistan is an area where groups opposed to the Coalition presence and the Transitional Authority of President Karzai continue to mount operations. It is not for the United Kingdom to comment on US Operations, however, US forces, in conjunction with other Coalition partners, not only provide support to the Transitional Authority in Kabul, but also act in the wider effort to tackle the limited threat to the security of Afghanistan posed by al-Qaeda, and other dissident remnants.

Anthrax Find

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will release information on the courses of MOD vessels on or before the 23 January from which the quantities of anthrax vaccine found on a Dorset beach could have come; and if he will make a statement. [97307]

Dr. Moonie: The possible source of the quantities of anthrax vaccine found on south coast beaches in January is the subject of an ongoing Special Investigation Branch investigation. To release information at this stage could prejudice that ongoing work. I will write to the hon. Member when the investigation is complete.

Army Reservists (NHS)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many and what category of NHS staff have been called up as Army reservists in the last four weeks. [89789]

Dr. Moonie: In the four weeks prior to 9 January, 33 NHS staff were called up as Army reservists for involvement in Operations in the Balkans, and in preparation for possible operations in the Gulf.

The NHS categories involved are:

Environmental Health Officer

Consultant Anaesthetics and Resuscitation Doctor

Nurse

Ophthalmic Nurse Specialist

Pharmacist

Directorate Manager of Anaesthetics Theatres and Intensive Care Unit

Misuse of Drugs Inspector

Consultant Haematologist and Physician

Senior Registrar

Consultant Surgeon

Consultant Gynaecologist.

Defence Diversification Agency

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the objectives of the Defence Diversification Agency. [95304]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence takes the issues of diversification very seriously and encourages the widest possible exploitation of defence technology by the civil sector. In order to facilitate this we established the Defence Diversification Agency (DDA) in 1999 and it continues with its original aims:

To encourage the wider use of defence science and technology in the civil sector.

To encourage the transfer to suitable civil technology into military programmes.

To assist the defence industry with their own diversification planning.

To deliver these objectives the DDA has established a network of technology brokers across the United Kingdom. Thus far 18 offices have been opened with further ones planned.

Each office is staffed with a Technology Diversification Manager whose role is to seek business opportunities working in partnership with local business support and enterprise groups.

Defence Establishments (Closures)

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the Ministry of Defence establishments that have been designated for closure; [95403]

(2) how many Ministry of Defence establishments were closed in 2002. [95402]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Depleted Uranium

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the expenditure was on MOD research into depleted uranium munitions in each year since 1997 and what percentage of the departmental budget this represented in each case. [97284]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 11 February 2003]: Approximate figures are set out in the table. All figures are at outturn prices and include VAT.

Financial year	Expenditure (£)	Percentage of defence budget
1997–98	120,000	0.00057
1998–99	140,000	0.00062
1999–2000	85,000	0.00037
2000–01	105,000	0.00045
2001–02	135,000	0.00056
2002–03	[1]1,680,000	0.007

[1] Budgeted

Additionally, some further research was carried out on Challenger II and other anti-armour weapons. The DU element of this was not separately identified at the time.

Eurofighter

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on the Eurofighter in each year from 1997–98 to 2008–09; and if he will make a statement. [95780]

Mr. Ingram: Total expenditure by the Ministry of Defence on acquisition of the Eurofighter Typhoon, on a cash basis and at outturn prices, was as follows:

Year	£ million
1997–98	410
1998–99	570
1999–2000	580
2000–01	760
2001–02	840
2002–03	800

Note:
The figure for 2002–03 is an estimate.

Figures for future years are being withheld in accordance with Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information that relates to confidentiality of internal discussions and advice.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Eurofighter aircraft he plans to purchase; and if he will make a statement. [95781]

Mr. Ingram: We plan to purchase 232 Eurofighter Typhoon aircraft.

Human Centrifuge

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 29 January 2003, Official Report, column 859W, on human centrifuge, which company, other than AMST, is bidding for the High G RAF human centrifuge project. [97325]

Mr. Ingram: Wyle Laboratories Inc., of El Segundo, USA, are the other company that have received an invitation to tender for the High G RAF human centrifuge project as recorded in the MOD Defence Contracts Bulletin (Vol. 1 No.5) dated 15 January 2003.

Iraq

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many reservists working in the NHS have been called up to serve in Iraq; and whether the hospital trusts concerned have been informed; [93031]

(2) how many reservists are working in the NHS (a) as doctors, (b) as nurses, (c) as paramedics and (d) in professions allied to medicine. [93029]

Dr. Moonie: Reservists are not usually required to provide details of any civilian employment to the Ministry of Defence until such time as they are called-out. Historically, therefore, no central records have been maintained by the MOD of the numbers of reservists working in the NHS as doctors, nurses, paramedics and other professionals allied to medicine. Although the MOD encourages reservists to declare their reserve status to civilian employers, there is no legal requirement to do so unless specified in individual contracts of employment. The call-out papers sent to reservists require them to advise the MOD of their civilian employer, and to pass to their employer documents relating to their call-out, including a form for the employer to return to the MOD acknowledging the call-out.

Information is not available centrally on the civilian employment of medical reservists called-out for service in the event of military action against Iraq. However, some medical reservists who have been issued with call-out papers had previously declared their civilian employment. As at 6 February, 345 medical reservists in the Volunteer Reserve Forces had been sent call-out papers, and of these, 194 are understood to be working in the NHS. In addition, 182 medical ex-regular Royal Air Force personnel with a reserve liability have been sent call-out papers but information on their civilian employment is not currently available.

NHS hospital trusts would be informed by reservists of their call-out when they receive their call-out papers. The MOD will work with the Department of Health to minimise disruption to the NHS as far as possible.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to protect the health of the indigenous population of Iraq in the theatre of operations. [95915]

Dr. Moonie: In the event of military operations, we would as always, take great care to minimise civilian casualties. This Government take very seriously their responsibility to act within the framework of international law regulating international conflict. Saddam Hussein of course has no such scruples, as he demonstrated when he used chemical weapons against his own people.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (a) what role is planned for British field hospitals in Iraq and (b) what preparations have been made for such hospitals to receive civilian casualties of all nationalities in the event of hostilities in Iraq. [97769]

Dr. Moonie: The purpose of British field hospitals is to provide hospital equivalent support to United Kingdom forces and their military allies and to meet the requirements of The Hague and Geneva Conventions in the provision of medical support for wounded prisoners of war. They are therefore equipped and manned to support this role.

There has been no decision to take military action against Iraq. Saddam Hussein might still comply with the demands of the international community although time is running out. If the use of military force is sanctioned, this Government will take its responsibility to act within the framework of international law regulating international conflict very seriously which includes obligations pertaining to civilian populations.

Missile Defence

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research NATO is carrying out on (a) theatre missile defence and (b) ballistic missile defence of Europe. [96947]

Mr. Hoon: NATO has decided to conduct two feasibility studies related to missile defence. The first was launched in July 2001 and addressed Active Layered Tactical Ballistic Missile Defence. The study is nearing completion.

The second feasibility study is related to protection of Alliance territory, forces and population centres, but is still in the preparatory stage and is unlikely to commence before the end of 2003.

NATO

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what the annual cost of British membership in NATO was in (a) 1990, (b) 1995 and (c) 2000; and what percentage of the Department's budget was paid to NATO in each those years. [93941]

Mr. Hoon: The United Kingdom's direct contributions to NATO's Security Investment Programme and Military Budget are paid directly from the UK Defence Budget. The Defence Budget also pays a very small amount to the NATO Civil Budget (the main portion is paid by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office).

I am unable to provide the financial details for 1990 as this information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The information for 1991, 1995 and 2000 is shown in the table.

Year	UK payment to NATO (£ million)	Defence budget (£ million)	Percentage of Defence budget
1991	199.6	23,637	0.92
1995	110.8	21,439	0.52
2000	105.8	23,548	0.45

Night Vision Equipment

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what personal night vision equipment is in service with (a) infantry, (b) Royal Marine units, (c) RAF and (d) Fleet Air Arm airerew. [96937]

Mr. Ingram: As at 7 February 2003, the personal night vision equipment in service with the Infantry, Royal Marines and RAF is set out in the following table. This is a snapshot in time as the figures change on a daily basis. Information is not held centrally for the Fleet Air Ann aircrew, but I will write to the hon. Member when I have the information and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Operation Southern Watch

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the RAF's Tornado GR4s are capable of supporting Operation Southern Watch duties; and if he will make a statement. [97194]

Mr. Ingram: All RAF Tornado GR4s within the Actual Operating Fleet are capable of supporting Operation Southern Watch.

Operation Telic

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which RAF units will be participating in Operation Telic; and if he will make a statement. [97195]

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will list the RAF (a) units and (b) assets to be deployed to the Gulf region; what the last three operational tours of each was; and what units are earmarked to replace those currently being deployed.

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 11 February 2003]: A list of the RAF units from which assets have currently been assigned to Operation TELIC as in the following table. Approximately 100 fixed-wing and 27 rotary-wing aircraft have been assigned to Operation Telic.

Unit	Last three operational tours
11 Squadron RAF Regiment	Resinate South	Silkman	Maidenly
34 Squadron RAF Regiment	Fingal	Resinate South
120 Squadron (Nimrod MR2)	Veritas/Oracle	Resinate South	Harmala
201 Squadron (Nimrod MR2)	Veritas/Oracle	Resinate South	Harmala
206 Squadron (Nimrod MR2)	Veritas/Oracle	Resinate South	Harmala

Unit	Last three operational tours
11 Squadron (Tornado F3)	Veritas	Resinate South	Falkland Islands
25 Squadron (Tornado F3)	Resinate South	Falkland Islands	Veritas
43 Squadron (Tornado F3)	Falkland Islands	Veritas	Resinate South
111 Squadron (Tornado F3)	Resinate South	Veritas	Falkland Islands
(Helicopter) RAF Odiham (note 2)	Jacana	Oculus	Banner
(Helicopter) RAF Benson (note 2)	Oculus	Agricola	Barwood

Notes:
1. Where less than three operations are shown the unit has not completed any further operational tours.
2. Helicopter units are identified by station, not Squadron.

At present it is premature to speculate about the duration of any military deployments or about the rotation or replacement of the forces involved. No United Kingdom forces have been committed to any military action against Iraq and there is still time for Saddam to comply fully with UNSCR 1441 and avoid disarmament by force.

Royal Navy Ships

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether further reductions in Royal Navy (a) warships and (b) submarines are envisaged in consequence of the new chapter of the Strategic Defence Review. [94544]

Mr. Hoon: As I said when announcing its publication, the New Chapter provided a "mandate for accelerating the modernisation and evolution of the armed forces" (18 July 2002, Official Report, column 461). The Defence White Paper, which I intend to publish later this year, will explain our plans to use the additional resources made available in Spending Review 2002 for further investment in the capabilities to enable the Royal Navy to meet the challenges posed by the changed strategic context.

Tank Procurement

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the expenditure by his Department on tank procurement in each year from 1990–91 to 2008–09 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [95778]

Mr. Ingram: Expenditure on tank procurement during the period 1990 to 2002 is shown in the table.

£ million

	Direct procurement expenditure
1990–94	—
1994–95	31
1995–96	73
1996–97	12
1997–98	36
1998–99	352
1999–2000	412
2000–01	282
2001–02	281
2002 to present	—

Planned expenditure on tank procurement over the period 2003–09 has yet to be decided. As part of our evaluation of the Future Rapid Effect System (FRES), we are investigating the possibility of including a direct fire (light tank) variant. FRES is still in its Concept Phase and has yet to go through the first stage of the formal approval process (Initial Gate).

Universities' Royal Naval Units

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role and structure of the Universities' Royal Naval Units. [92959]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Vacant Ministry Buildings

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of Ministry of Defence owned buildings are vacant; and if he will make a statement. [95786]

Dr. Moonie: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Working Week

Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours were worked in the average week in (a) the Army, (b) the Navy and (c) the Air Force in each of the past five years. [97924]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and I will place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Air Quality

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy to implement recommendations for low emission zones made by the National Society for Clean Air. [97017]

Alun Michael: The Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Transport wrote to the National Society for Clean Air last May, on behalf of himself and the then Minister for Environment, agreeing, in principal, the merits of Government support for their recommendation for a low emission zone national standard. I understand the Society has still to finalise their proposals and are about to undertake further consultation. We have asked the Society to let us know the outcome to allow consideration of the potential social and economic impacts of a final standard before formally agreeing to endorse it.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the local authorities in England which have completed Ambient Air Quality (a) plans and (b) assessments; and what measures she is taking to assist local authorities to adopt ambient air quality plans. [98008]

Alun Michael: Local authorities have a statutory duty under the Environment Act 1995 to designate air quality management areas where it is likely that the air quality objectives, as prescribed in regulations, will not be met by the relevant deadline.

Over 100 authorities have now declared air quality management areas. Following the designation of an air quality management area, the local authority has a statutory duty to undertake a further review and assessment within 12 months from when the air quality management area came into effect. The local authority also has to produce an action plan within 12–18 months setting out the measures it intends to implement to work towards meeting the air quality objectives in that area.

Those local authorities in England which have produced air quality action plans and consulted the Secretary of State on them are listed as follows:

Westminster City Council
London borough of Croydon
London borough of Camden
London borough of Southwark
London borough of Greenwich
London borough of Barnet
London borough of Richmond upon Thames
London borough of Lambeth
London borough of Merton
London borough of Islington
London borough of Enfield
London borough of Waltham Forest
London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham
Royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea
London borough of Ealing
Corporation of London
South Lakeland
Dartford
Fenland
North Warwickshire
Thurrock
Wycombe
Tonbridge and Malling
Doncaster
Warrington
Derby
Colchester
Leeds

Those local authorities in England which have produced further assessments under section 84 of the 1995 Act and consulted the Secretary of State are listed as follows:

Babergh DC
Barnsley MBC
Bath and NE Somerset
Bristol City Council
Bromsgrove
City of Westminster
Colchester BC
Corporation of London
Dartford BC
Derby City Council
Doncaster MBC
Erewash BC
Fenland DC
Gravesham BC
Herefordshire
Hertsmere
London borough of Barnet
London borough of Camden
London borough of Croydon
London borough of Ealing
London borough of Enfield
London borough of Lewisham
London borough of Richmond
London borough of Waltham Forest
Leeds City Council
Maidstone BC
Manchester City Council
Medway
North Warwickshire
Royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea
Rochdale
Rotherham
Rushmoor
Salisbury
South Gloucestershire
South Lakeland
St. Edmundsbury
Stockport
Stroud
Tewkesbury
Thurrock
Tonbridge and Mailing
Trafford MBC
Warrington
Wigan
Wokingham
Wycombe
York

In England, the Revenue Support Grant Settlement provides running cost resources for local air quality management duties under the 1995 Act. We also have a Supplementary Credit Approvals (SCAs) programme to support local authorities' capital costs and we have targeted the SCAs at those authorities who have to undertake further assessments and those with action plans. Local authorities can also bid for funds through the local transport plan regime to support local traffic measures in their action plans.

Illegal Meat Imports

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many people coming into the UK have been apprehended at the port of entry in each of the last five years for illegal importation of meat products. [96021]

Mr. Morley: Since we started keeping records centrally in April 2001, we have been notified of 5,818 people who have had products of animal origin seized and notices served. However, we have not been notified of anyone being arrested at the port of entry for the illegal importation of meat products.

Sheep Dip

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information she has collated on adverse health effects reported following use of sheep dip by farmers. [95844]

Mr. Morley: In October 2002 the Government published a Report on an Analytical Study of data collected under the UK's Veterinary Medicines Suspected Adverse Reaction Surveillance Scheme (SARSS) on reports of suspected adverse reactions to OP sheep dips. This Report is available in the Library of the House and on the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD)'s website (www.vmd.gov.uk).

The Report's main conclusions were that:

The strength of internal association shown between reports of ill health and both the extent and current status of dipping activities underlines the importance of the Government funded epidemiological and mechanistic research studies currently underway;

the variable quality of the data submitted to the SARSS, together with the inherent nature of data from a passive monitoring system, prevented firmer conclusions being drawn; and while no novel patterns of symptoms were detected, some symproms (notably myalgia and depression) were prominent features of OP related suspected adverse reaction reports.

This report has been considered by the Veterinary Products Committee (VPC), the independent advisory committee of experts established to provide advice to Government on the safety, quality and efficacy of veterinary medicines. The VPC has advised that the report's findings do not support any additional regulatory action being taken on OP sheep dips.

Final findings from the Government's £1.4 million targeted research programme on OPs are expected in 2006.

Animal Diseases (EU Finance)

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to the answer of 19 November 2002, Official Report, column 40W, on animal diseases (EU finance), on what date the claims were submitted to the European Commission and by what means. [97916]

Mr. Morley: In order to claim EU contributions to expenditure in 2003, we were required to submit programmes for that year by 1 June 2002. Northern Ireland officials wrote to the Commission on 14 June 2002, submitting their programmes for TB and Brucella. Defra wrote to the Commission on 22 October 2002 submitting programmes for TSE testing. The Commission confirmed on 11 November 2002 that it was not then legally possible for payments to be made.

Animal Welfare

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action the Government have taken to limit the maximum journey time for livestock throughout Europe. [97136]

Mr. Morley: The rules governing animal welfare during transport, including maximum permitted journey times, are set down in directive 91/628/EEC, as amended. They are implemented in GB by the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Order 1997, as amended. We have consistently pressed the European Commission to bring forward proposals to amend and update these rules. In September 2002, the Secretary of State supported calls for shorter journey times for animals going to slaughter.

In the wider European context, we have played a leading role in revising the Council of Europe Convention for the Protection of Animals During International Transport.

Badgers

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what evidence her Department evaluated in advance of the slaughter of badgers at Saltdean. [95331]

Mr. Morley: Before granting a licence under the Protection of Badgers Act 1992, for the capture and humane killing of badgers occupying one sett, to prevent serious damage to property in Saltdean, we evaluated evidence that included reports following site visits by wildlife advisers from the Department's Rural Development Service, and advice given by the Central Science Laboratory. In this case we also consulted English Nature, the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals and the National Federation of Badger Groups.

Capital Projects

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will place the evaluations for Capital Modernisation Fund projects in her Department and undertaken by the Forestry Commission since 1998 in the Library; and if she will make a statement. [97030]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission is undertaking two projects through the Capital Modernisation Fund. The first relates to Community Forestry and the second involves the modernisation of the Commission's holiday cabin sites in England.

However, both projects are still in progress and full evaluation reports are not, therefore, available at this time.

Cetaceans

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the estimated number of dolphins in (a) 2003 and (b) 1993 within the British Isles. [96921]

Mr. Morley: Obtaining population estimates for cetaceans is difficult. There is a wide margin of error within abundance estimates and the geographical limits of most biological populations of dolphin species are not known.

To date, major surveys of cetacean distribution or abundance have not been carried out at regular intervals. The table, which has been placed in the Library, gives figures from the 2002 report of the Advisory Committee on Ecosystems of the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (ICES), illustrating the latest information on the populations and abundance of cetaceans that occur in UK waters. The populations are given in terms of ICES areas or geographical locality. A map showing the ICES areas has been placed in the Library of the House.

A consortium of international researchers, co-ordinated by the Sea Mammal Research Unit, is planning to carry out a survey of the distribution and abundance of small cetaceans in 2004–05. It is intended that all UK waters will be included in the survey area. International funding is being sought in support of this work.

Reliable estimates for dolphin abundance in British waters in 1993 are not available.

Correspondence

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Workington dated 10 December 2001, sent on to her Department in March 2002, concerning Mr. Williams, a constituent. [92879]

Mr. Meacher: The correspondence referred to was received in the Department for the first time in December 2002 when the hon. Member sent a copy. I replied on 12 February 2003.

Dairy Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assistance and support she is able to provide to dairy farmers in the north-west; and what recent discussions she has had with (a) representatives from the dairy industry and (b) supermarkets regarding the price of milk. [94918]

Mr. Morley: Dairy farmers in the north-west, in common with the rest of the country, benefit indirectly from the Dairy CAP, which involves expenditure of nearly two billion euros across the Community. Despite this considerable expenditure, the farmgate price of milk remains below the level at which many dairy farmers can make the investment required to sustain their businesses. This clearly shows the current Dairy CAP is failing farmers and is in need of reform. The UK Government do not regard the Commission proposals for dairy reform in the context of the Mid Term Review to go far enough to address those concerns.

The prices negotiated between farmers and purchases, or processors and retailers, are private commercial matters in which the Government cannot get involved. We have not therefore met with representatives of the dairy industry specifically to discuss this issue. However, Ministers frequently meet with representatives from all parts of the dairy sector in the course of their duties, to discuss the overall market situation, and we are well aware of concerns about prices.

We believe that a sustainable future for dairy farming is best secured through the action we have already announced in response to the recommendations of the Policy Commission on the Future of Food and Farming and our Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food, which we published on 12 December 2002. My noble Friend, Lord Whitty has convened a number of meetings of an informal dairy supply chain group, which has addressed some of these issues. In addition, at its next meeting on 28 February 2003 this group will discuss how the industry might address any lessons that emerge from the on-going study by KPMG on the structure of the UK dairy sector and milk pricing, which was commissioned by the Milk Development Council, as well as the Commission's proposals for reform of the Dairy CAP.

Departmental Budgets

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the budgets are for 2002–03 for each of the advisory bodies, stakeholders groups, executive agencies, executive non-departmental public bodies, advisory non-departmental public bodies, public corporations and tribunals sponsored by her Department, as listed on pages 87–89 of the Defra Departmental Report 2002; and if she will make a statement. [93713]

Alun Michael: The information requested on the executive agencies and for most of the executive non-departmental public bodies and public corporations is given in the table. Equivalent information on the other bodies is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost:

	£000
Central Science Laboratory	2,233
Centre for Environment, Fisheries and Aquaculture Science	9,443
Pesticides Safety Directorate	-2,449
Rural Payments Agency	493,595
Veterinary Laboratories Agency	9,089
Veterinary Medicines Directorate	-398
Apple and Pear Research Council	105
British Potato Council	6,747
Countryside Agency	95,439
English Nature	71,038
Environment Agency	330,569
Food From Britain	5,428
Home-Grown Cereals Authority	11,364
Horticultural Development Council	571
Horticulture Research International	7,297
Meat and Livestock Commission	27,873
Milk Development Council	7,464
National Forest Company	1,824
Royal Botanic Gardens, Kew	22,159
Sea Fish Industry Authority	1,449
Wine Standards Board	448
British Waterways Board	123,250
Covent Garden Market Authority	1,957

Departmental Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list consultations her Department has conducted since it was established; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed. [97433]

Alun Michael: Information on written consultation exercises undertaken by Defra is in the public domain and can be obtained from the Department's website at pawww.defra.gov.uk. in the section entitled 'Consultations'. This includes information on the opening and closing dates for all consultations.

European Water Directive

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans her Department has to develop and implement a communications strategy for the EU Water Framework Directive. [96617]

Mr. Morley: Defra's stakeholder group will be meeting regularly to discuss implementation issues and develop agreed approaches to communicating the key messages of the directive. The Environment Agency is also developing a public participation strategy for the implementation of the directive through river basin management plans. This will draw on a pilot river basin project in the Ribble basin.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to pilot the Common Implementation Strategy Guidance on Wetlands in the EU Water Framework Directive. [96620]

Mr. Morley: A drafting group led by Italy with UK participation is due to submit draft guidance on wetlands for adoption by an EC Water Directors group by May 2003. We will then be able to take a view on whether and in what way the guidance might be piloted in England, alongside other piloting work which will be under way.

Flood Defences (Hampton Bishop)

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action the Environment Agency is taking to ensure that the Welsh Environment Agency repairs the flood defence barrier by the Bunch of Carrots pub at Hampton Bishop, Herefordshire. [95656]

Mr. Morley: Operational responsibility for flood measures rests with the local operating authorities, normally the Environment Agency (EA) and local councils, who decide which projects to promote and their timing. This Department provides grants for flood and coastal defence capital works and associated studies, which meet essential technical, economic and environmental criteria and achieve an appropriate priority score.

I understand that EA Wales is preparing a submission to Defra for approval of grant aid on a proposed scheme to strengthen and improve approximately 1 km of the existing embankment along the River Wye at Hampton Bishop, Herefordshire. The EA has identified this length as having a potential weakness in extreme flood conditions. Additionally the agency, in co-operation with Herefordshire county council, has put into place an emergency response procedure for Hampton Bishop. This would include the evacuation of residents in the event of the agency issuing a severe flood warning for the location.

Flooding

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the (a) local authorities and (b) local drainage boards whose information about flood risks has been entered into the National Flood and Coastal Defence Database. [89638]

Margaret Beckett: No information about flood risk from local authorities or local drainage boards has yet been entered into the National Flood and Coastal Defence Database. At present priority is being given to entering Environment Agency data, information on flood risk from local authorities and drainage boards is being collected and will be input in the next phase.

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much grant aid has been paid to the Environment Agency and its flood defence committees for flood defence in England in each of the past five financial years; how much will be allocated to them this financial year; and how much has been allocated under the Government's Spending Review 2002 for the next three financial years. [90816]

Mr. Morley: The Environment Agency (EA) receives the bulk of its funding for management of flood risk through levies on local authorities which are largely reimbursed by central Government through the ODPM's funding stream to local authorities. Defra provides grant aid to the flood and coastal defence operating authorities (EA, local authorities and internal drainage boards) to support their capital works and related studies in the management of risk from flooding and coastal erosion. In the case of the EA, additional contributions are made to support national initiatives such as the flood warning public awareness campaign, the national flood and coastal defence database and catchment flood management plans. Figures in cash terms for Defra grant allocated in the current and five past years are:

Year	Grant (£ million)
1997–98 (actual)[1]	43.0
1998–99 (actual)	33.8
1999–2000 (actual)	33.0
2000–2001 (actual)	41.9
2001–02 (actual)	61.5
2002–03 (forecast)	70.0
2003–04 (forecast)[2]	69.0

[1] The initial allocations for 1997–98 was increased significantly in year by redistribution of funds from elsewhere in the Department.
[2] Spending provision of £114 million for all authorities for 2003–04 proved insufficient to meet investment needs and Defra has increased this to £136 million. However, a number of unusually large local authority projects have meant the EA allocation has had to remain at much the same level as for 2002–03.

Allocations are decided annually and the EA's for 2004–05 and 2005–06 have not yet been set. However indicative figures, which will be subject to change, at £80 million and £110 million respectively.

Forest Enterprise (England) (Grant Provision)

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) whether the increase in grant to Forest Enterprise (England) has been above, below or at inflation level for the past five years; [96232]

(2) what the grant was to Forest Enterprise (England) in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999, (d) 2000, (e) 2001 and (f) 2002; [96224]

(3) what the proposed grant to Forest Enterprise (England) is in 2003. [96225]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 February 2003]: Prior to devolution in 1999, all Forestry Commission and Forest Enterprise financial records and accounts were maintained on a GB-wide basis. It has not, therefore, been possible to identify the relevant figures for the years 1997–98 and 1998–99. The net cash costs of Forest Enterprise (England) for the last three years, together with the forecast for the current financial year and budget for 2003–04, are given in the following table.

	£,000
Year
1999–2000	3,381
2000–01	13,183
2001–02	13,007
2002–03[1]	25,950
2003–04[2]	19,500

[1] Forecast
[2] Budget

The net cash expenditure of Forest Enterprise is funded from the Forestry Commission's annual vote and is not linked to inflation. The funding takes account of various factors such as changes in activities, steeply declining timber prices and variations in capital income and expenditure, particularly through successful bids to the Capital Modernisation Fund.

GM Crops

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the notification of (a) genetically modified oilseed rape (GT73) by the Dutch Government and (b) genetically modified maize (NK603) by the Spanish Government; and what representations she has made to those Governments and the European Commission. [94934]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 4 February 2003]: The dossiers for these two applications were received from the European Commission on 24 January 2003 with favourable opinions from the Dutch and Spanish competent authorities respectively. Under the provisions of Directive 2001/18 on the release of GMOs to the environment, the UK has 60 days from the date of receipt in which to consider the dossiers and forward comments or reasoned objections. Both are applications for consent to import the specific GM grain commodities for processing and use as food and as animal feed or as an ingredient in food and in animal feed products. The dossiers will be assessed by the UK Government and the Devolved Administrations, taking advice from the relevant expert advisory committees on environmental, human and animal health aspects. In these cases advice will be needed from the Advisory Committee on Releases to the Environment, the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes and the Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs. We will also take due account of comments made by members of the UK public in response to public consultations that are being organised by the Commission.

Janet Hughes (Costs Claim)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make it her policy not to enforce her Department's claim for costs against Janet Hughes of Churchstoke, Montgomery. [95340]

Margaret Beckett [holding answer 3 February 2003]: Janet Hughes was ordered by the Court to pay Defra's legal costs following an unsuccessful judicial review claim. The Department has a responsibility to protect public expenditure. The possibility of having to pay costs for unsuccessful litigation is something of which Ms Hughes should have been made fully aware by her legal advisers at the time. My Department gave her a number of opportunities to put forward payment proposals, which she has refused to do until now. I am considering the proposal she has now made.

Parrett Catchment Project

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what jobs have been declared by the chairman of the Parrett catchment project. [95191]

Mr. Morley: As the Parrett Catchment Project is an independent body, no such declaration has to be made to the Department by the chair.

Public Service Agreement

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to her answer of 3 February 2003, Official Report, column 25W, on the public service agreement, how the savings will be measured; and if she will make a statement. [97289]

Alun Michael: Defra budgets have been fixed on the basis that target efficiency gains will be achieved. Business areas will therefore be required to identify ways of achieving the same outcomes within these budget constraints. In order to ensure these efficiency gains are captured and measured, business areas will be required to produce an efficiency plan as part of the business planning process. These plans will be monitored centrally.

Radioactive Waste

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what quality control programme is in place for the stocks of high activity radioactive waste in store at (a) Sellafield, (b) Dounreay, (c) Harwell and (d) nuclear power plant sites. [95263]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

The Quality Control arrangements in place for High Level Waste at the Sellafield Site are designed and implemented to ensure safe and reliable operations and product storage.

The Quality Management System of Thorp and the High Level Waste Plant's Vitrification Lines is independently certified to the international quality standard ISO 9002:1994. Staff involved in the management and control of high activity waste are suitably qualified and experienced. Routine staff assessment and training is performed to ensure that the appropriate level of expertise is maintained. Waste operations at Sellafield are regulated by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII) under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

The storage of high-level waste liquors at Dounreay is subject to a strict monitoring and surveillance regime by UKAEA, and is also regulated by the NII under the conditions of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

In addition, all Dounreay operations, including the management of wastes, meet the requirements of the international quality standard ISO 9001/2000 and the environmental management standard ISO 14001.

There are no high activity wastes at Harwell.

Returnable Bottles

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effect of the use of returnable bottles on reducing the amount of domestic and commercial waste in the UK; and if she will make a statement. [94590]

Mr. Meacher: We believe there are overall environmental and commercial benefits in a deposit and return system for bottles. A deposits system would involve the public directly in waste collection and this would help to change the culture of waste collection and recycling.

We are currently investigating deposit systems used in other European countries. Some of these countries have reported very high administrative costs, which could make these schemes a more expensive way of recycling products than other collection methods. Some countries have reported benefits from such systems, particularly in terms of higher recycling rates, but sometimes these occur in the countries which have high packaging waste recycling targets and it is not clear that deposit systems on their own would deliver high recycling rates in a cost-effective way.

We would therefore need to consider both the costs and benefits of a deposit scheme. We would also have to examine how deposit systems could complement and add to other means of encouraging waste minimization and recycling, such as the packaging regulations.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made by the Government since 1997 in strengthening the legislative protection afforded to sites of special scientific interest. [97135]

Mr. Morley: The legislative protection afforded to sites of special scientific interest (SSSIs) in England was significantly strengthened by Part III of the Countryside and Rights of Way (CROW) Act 2000. The Act became law on 30 January 2001. The amendments introduced include:

provisions that enable English Nature to exercise greater control over activities that may affect SSSIs by refusing, modifying or applying conditions to consents as appropriate;

a power for English Nature to secure the management of a SSSI; improved procedures for notification and denotification of SSSIs;

various rights of appeal to owners and occupiers of land who are affected by the Act's provisions; increased powers of entry to land for English Nature and extended powers of compulsory purchase; increased penalties for damage to a SSSI by owners and occupiers and new offences for damage to a SSSI by other people, including public bodies;

a new power for English Nature to make byelaws to protect SSSIs;

new duties on public bodies and statutory bodies in respect of SSSIs; and, restrictions on public bodies and statutory bodies when they carry out or authorise activities which affect a SSSI.

Sudden Oak Death

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will assess the risk of infection by the sudden oak death fungal pathogen Phytophthora ramorum in (a) quercus species and (b) fagus species. [95949]

Mr. Meacher: The Pest Risk Assessment for Phytophthora ramorum shows that various quercus species, including Quercus rubra (American red oak) and Quercus ilex (Mediterranean holly oak), have been shown to be particularly susceptible to the disease. In initial results of trials under laboratory conditions, Quercus robur (English oak) has shown less susceptibility. Fagus sylvatica (European beech) is also classed as being susceptible to the disease. This research work is continuing. I have placed a copy of the latest revision of the Summary Pest Risk Analysis, which is under continual review and includes the risk assessment, in the Library of the House.

Warm Front Grants

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much money in total has been allocated to Warm Front. [88019]

Mr. Morley: Between June 2000 and March 2002 some £270 million was spent under the Warm Front scheme. The Warm Front budget for the current year is £163 million. Defra allocations for future years are still under discussion.

Waste Management

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what additional funding will be made available to local authorities and community organisations for sustainable waste management projects to replace project funding under the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme; when these funds will become available; and by what mechanism these funds will be distributed. [97051]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 12 February 2003]: The Landfill Tax Credit Scheme (LTCS) transition scheme announced by my right hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 3 February 2003 is now open for applications from those projects that consider they meet the criteria set out in the statement. Funding is available to meet all eligible applications. The regulator of LTCS, Entrust, will also administer this scheme and further information is available on the Entrust website at www.entrust.org.uk In implementing this transitional funding arrangement, the Government are putting in place a straightforward process for making decisions on funding to ensure minimum delay and uncertainty for on-going projects. Also, by establishing this transitional funding period the Government are providing a reasonable period for projects to manage the consequences of the decision announced in the Pre-Budget Report.

Decisions on the mechanisms to be used to distribute funds under the new public expenditure programmes, aimed at delivering sustainable waste management objectives, have yet to be made. An announcement on this is expected next month.

Water Framework Directive

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to consult on the creation of formal links between river basin management planning and land use planning during the process of implementing the Water Framework Directive. [95670]

Mr. Morley: The relationship between the Water Framework Directive and the planning system was one of the issues on which respondents were invited to give their views in the recent second consultation exercise on implementation of the directive and will be discussed in Defra's water stakeholder group.

Woodland Grant Scheme

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what evaluation she has made of the impact on (a) the rural economy, (b) rural employment and (c) skills retention of possible changes in the level of winter tree planting as a result of the revision of the closing dates for the Woodland Grant Scheme; [96809]

(2) what evaluation she has made of the impact on the nursery tree production sector of the introduction of a single closing date for the Woodland Grant Scheme for new planting. [96824]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 10 February 2003]: A significant area of the land to be planted in the 2003–04 season has already been approved for grant aid, and the Forestry Commission is not expecting a substantial reduction in applications in 2003. In addition, planting under Challenge and other schemes is not affected by the closing dates. Overall, the Commission has assessed that the changes to the closing dates would have minimal impact on the rural economy, rural employment, skills retention and the forest nursery trade.

TRANSPORT

Air Travel Security

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to require airlines to ask all passengers to prove their identity; [97905]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for the Home Department concerning the imposition of a requirement on airlines to ask all passengers to prove their identity. [97906]

Mr. Jamieson: The UK National Aviation Security Programme does not specifically require airlines to ask passengers to prove their identity, and while all measures are kept under review, there is no present intention that it should do so. The primary measures which underpin security in this area is that all passengers, all items of hand baggage and all items of hold baggage must be screened, and that airlines must ensure that the person who checks in hold baggage is the same person who subsequently boards the aircraft. We do not specify how airlines should achieve this, instead allowing them flexibility. On international flights where passports are carried, airlines usually use these to confirm identity. On domestic flights, and those to the Republic of Ireland where there is no need to carry a passport, airlines adopt a variety of methods to ensure that those who check hold baggage then travel with it.

Air Travel Reserve Fund

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the financial status of the Air Travel Reserve Fund; and if he will list which types of air tickets are (a) covered and (b) not covered by the Air Travel Reserve Fund and set out the (i) nature of such cover which may be available and (ii) the number and value of tickets sold in each category in each year from 1997. [97938]

Mr. Jamieson: The Air Travel Reserve Fund was wound up in 1986 and its functions were transferred to the Air Travel Trust Fund (ATTF). The ATTF provides a back-up facility to the Air Travel Organisers' Licensing (ATOL) scheme, should a bond held by an ATOL holder be insufficient to meet customer claims in the event of that company's financial failure. Taken together, the ATOL scheme and the ATTF cover air tickets sold by an ATOL holder, either as part of a package or on a seat-only basis. Air tickets sold directly by airlines or their ticketing agents are not covered, but some purchasers may be protected when a credit card is used. In the event of failure of an ATOL holder, the Civil Aviation Authority will ensure that those abroad at the time will be able to continue their holidays and return home, and will reimburse those who have paid for their holiday but have yet to travel.

The Air Travel Trust Fund (ATTF) has a current deficit of approximately £9 million, but is able to meet its liabilities on the basis of a Government guaranteed overdraft facility.

The number of tickets sold in each category in each year since 1997 is set out in the following table:

million

	Total sales	ATOL/ATTF protected sales
1997	39.7	23.5
1998	44.1	25.0
1999	47.3	26.4
2000	51.7	28.0
2001	53.8	29.1

Notes:
1. The totals in the centre column are estimates of the number of UK-originating return journeys made by people domiciled in the UK. The totals in the right-hand column are actual journeys made under the protection of ATOL. The number of journeys is a proxy for the number of tickets sold.
2. Figures for 2002 are not yet available.
3. Data on the total value of the tickets sold in each category are not available.

Aircraft (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from what time in the morning aircraft are permitted to fly into Heathrow over the Palace of Westminster. [97075]

Mr. Jamieson: Aircraft are permitted to fly over the Palace of Westminster, along with other parts of central London whenever Heathrow is open to receive flights.

Airport Security

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to increase security at BAA airports; and what discussions he has had with BAA and CAA on this issue and the funding of enhanced security. [97233]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 11 February 2003]: Following the attacks in the USA in September 2001, heightened aviation security measures were introduced at all UK airports, including those owned by BAA plc, and for all airlines operating from the UK. Security at UK airports remains at an enhanced level, and is kept under continuous review.

It has long been central to UK aviation policy that users should pay the full costs of air travel, and that this should include the costs of whatever level of security is deemed appropriate. There are no plans to change this approach.

Arriva Northern

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the (a) economic and (b) other effects of the Arriva Northern strike. [96713]

Mr. Spellar: None. Industrial relations are matters primarily between the train operators as employers and the trade unions representing their employees.

Capita

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 15 January 2003, Official Report, column 622W, on Capita, if he will give the (a) start and finish date, (b) value, (c) evaluation mechanism for successful delivery and (d) penalty charges for failure to deliver for each contract; whether penalty charges have been incurred; what the service level agreements were; what the contract numbers were; and if he will make a statement. [97335]

Mr. Jamieson: The information requested is given in the following table.

My Department currently has nine contracts with Capita. The National Traffic Census contract awarded to a Capita subsidiary (and various other companies) was omitted from my earlier answer in error.

The Department's evaluation mechanism for successful delivery of a contract is based on value for money, taking into consideration cost, quality and delivery for each individual tender.

Where potential loss to the Department can be quantified/assessed in advance, it may be covered by a liquidated damages clause. This is intended to cover only actual quantifiable losses by the Department.

The Driving Standards Agency contract for the provision of a computer system for the booking of the Practical Driving Test and associated services is the only current contract with Capita containing a liquidated damages clause. Liquidated damages were sought from, and later agreed with, Capita in 1999 following late delivery of the fully functional Driver Test Control element of the system.

Details of individual service level agreements are not provided to protect commercial confidentiality.

Capital Modernisation Fund

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the evaluations for the Capital Modernisation Fund projects relating to (a) London Underground, (b) priority bus routes, (c) rural transport, (d) networking of DSA test centres, (e) automatic number plate readers, (f) DLR City airport extension, (g) Transport Police communications, (h) VI motion sensors, (i) automated traffic management and (j) home zones; and if he will make a statement. [97025]

Mr. Jamieson: Capital Modernisation Fund funds for the London Underground were included in an overall grant to London Transport in 2000–01 in respect of preparations for the proposed modernisation of the London Underground network. The London Transport Annual Report for 2000–01 sets outs the Government funding for London Transport and how it was utilised.

The evaluation for the 'Automatic Number Plate Readers' Capital Modernisation Fund project has been completed and a copy will be placed in the Library.

The remaining Capital Modernisation Fund projects relating to my Department have not yet been completed and hence evaluations not carried out. Once evaluations have been undertaken they will be placed in the Library as appropriate.

Computer Hacking

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of computer (a) hacking, (b) fraud and (c) theft his Department recorded in 2001–02; and on how many occasions computer systems have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (i) within and (ii) outside his Department. [97565]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport was established on 29 May 2002. During the period 29 May 2002 to 31 December 2002 there were: (a) no recorded cases of computer hacking, (b) no recorded cases of computer fraud, and (c) one reported case of computer theft. The Department's predecessors during the period 1 January 2001 to 28th May 2002 were the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions, and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. During that period there were: (a) no recorded cases of computer hacking, (b) no recorded cases of computer fraud, and (c) five reported cases of computer theft.

Congestion Charge

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the cost of the congestion charge to the Department on the basis of motor vehicles supplied to (a) himself, (b) Ministers of State, (c) Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State, (d) Special Advisers and (e) departmental officials. [95298]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government Car and Despatch Agency will meet the costs of the congestion charge for the vehicles it supplies to Departments. It will recover the costs of these charges from Departments. The cost will depend on the number of days that the cars are used within the congestion zone boundary on official business.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 6 February 2003, ref. 95029, if he will establish a dedicated hotline so that the public can inform his Department of their experiences gained from road user charging schemes in London and Durham. [97382]

Mr. Jamieson: This is a matter for the relevant charging authority.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 6 February 2003, ref. 95029, by what means he intends to obtain information about experiences gained from road user charging schemes in London and Durham. [97383]

Mr. Jamieson: As well as views sent direct to Ministers we will carefully consider all the various monitoring and evaluation reports being planned. In Durham an agreement between the County Council and DfT requires detailed monitoring of the scheme including the effects on traffic, the impact on the peninsular etc. In London TfL will be monitoring and assessing traffic, public transport, social, environmental and economic indicators. I also understand that the Association of London Government and Westminster Council and others will be assessing the schemes.

Cycling

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department will take steps to (a) raise awareness among all road users of the purpose of advanced stop lines (ASLs) for cyclists, (b) educate all road users on their correct use and (c) publicise the legally enforceable nature of those facilities; and what steps he will take to ensure that ASLs are enforced. [97941]

Mr. Jamieson: Advanced stop lines are dealt with in rules 55 and 154 of the Highway Code. The Traffic Signs Regulations 2002 and DfT Circular 02/2003 clarify that all vehicles are required to stop at the first stop line unless they have already proceeded beyond it or are a pedal cycle proceeding in the cycle lane. This information is already available on the Department's Traffic Signs website and will be included in a leaflet we are publishing about new signs and changes in the meaning of existing signs. Enforcement is the responsibility of the police.

Delivery Unit

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which announcements made by his Department since June 2001 were cleared in advance with the Delivery Unit; [94350]

(2) if he will list the reports he has made since June 2001 to the Delivery Unit: [94354]

(3) which Ministers and officials from his Department have visited areas outside London accompanied by members of the Delivery Unit; [94352]

(4) when the Permanent Secretary in his Department last met members of the Delivery Unit; [94359]

(5) what targets have been set for his Department by the Delivery Unit since June 2001; and what progress has been made in meeting such targets; [94362]

(6) when Ministers from his Department last met members of the Delivery Unit; and on how many occasions since its establishment Ministers have met members of the Unit; [94357]

(7) how many reports his Department has been commissioned to produce by the Delivery Unit in the next (a) 12 and (b) 24 months; [94346]

(8) how many officials in his Department have been assigned to do specific work (a) with and (b) for the Delivery Unit since June 2001; [94348]

(9) when Ministers from his Department last met (a) the Prime Minister and (b) his officials to discuss targets set by the Delivery Unit; and what plans there are for further meetings. [94358]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for meeting the Department's Public Service Agreement targets set out Cm 5571, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

The Delivery Unit was established to strengthen the capacity of Whitehall to deliver the Government's key objectives. It works closely with us to help us deliver our PSA targets, and we are in regular contact with members of the Unit.

Information about internal meetings is not disclosed under Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Disabled Parking

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to review the criteria for awarding Blue Parking Badges to disabled people; what assessment he has made of the exclusion of Thalidomide sufferers from the awarding of Blue Parking Badges; and if he will make a statement. [97922]

Mr. Jamieson: A review of the Blue Badge Scheme has recently been concluded. The review considered all aspects of the scheme, including the eligibility criteria. Following initial discussions with the main stakeholders, a discussion paper was drawn up and comments were invited through a major public consultation exercise. Formal representations were made by the Thalidomide Trust and their views were given due consideration during the review process.

The Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee (DPTAC, the Department's statutory advisers on the transport needs of disabled people) were asked to look at the responses received and to submit their recommendations to Ministers. I announced in the House on 18 December 2002 that the Government would be taking forward the majority of these recommendations as soon as possible.

Eligibility for the Blue Badge will remain unchanged. This means that it will continue to be available to those disabled people who are unable or virtually unable to walk and to those with severe upper limb disabilities. Many people whose disability is the result of Thalidomide already qualify under one or other of these criteria.

Industrial Action/Illness

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many working days have been lost in his Department and its predecessors due to (a) industrial action and (b) illness in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01, (v) 2001–02 and (vi) 2002–03. [97845]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport was established following machinery of Government changes in May 2002.

No working days have been lost due to industrial action during the specified periods.

In respect of sickness absence, the most recent 'Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil service' was published by the Cabinet office and announced by Ministerial Statement on 19 December 2002. Copies were placed in the Libraries of the House. This covered the calendar year 2001 for the predecessor Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions and its executive agencies. Previous reports go back to 1996. Figures for 2002 will be announced in due course.

Level Crossings

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the trunk roads in England that are crossed by a rail level crossing. [97785]

Mr. Jamieson: There are 10 trunk roads in England that are crossed by a rail level crossing:

A5 Gobowen (Oswestry);
A27 Beddingham;
A47 Wisbech;
A49 Onibury;
A63 Thorpe Willoughby;
A249 Sheerness;
A259 Star Crossing;
A259 Brooklands (Thrift) Crossing;
A259 Guldeford Crossing; and A483 Maesbury.

M25

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answers of 17 December 2002, Official Report, column 684W, and 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 41W, on the M25, what his policy is on the provision for inspection by hon. Members of the full data and analysis produced by those Government-funded reports, the summary of which the Government publish; and for what reason hon. Members were unable to inspect the full data and analysis of the initial assessment by the Transport Research Laboratory of the Controlled Motorway Project on the M25 between 1997 and January 2003. [97777]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department's policy covering this issue, which was introduced on 30 November 2002, is that final project reports arising from commissioned projects are made available, except in those cases where the Department has not secured the rights to publish. Any information that addresses issues of national security, commercial or personal confidentiality will be excluded. Notices, strategies and the Executive Summaries of final research project reports will be published on the DfT website at: www.dft.gov.uk Full research reports may also be published on the website or will be available through contacts identified on the website.

The full report on the assessment of the controlled motorway project on the M25 is expected to be placed in the Libraries of the House in late autumn 2003, as stated in my answer of 17 December 2002 to the hon. Member. As such it is not possible to make this available until that date.

A previous report was made available on request following my answer of 20 January 2003 to the hon. Member. Other reports and data which have not been published can be made available and I have asked the Highways Agency to contact the hon. Member as there is a considerable volume of data involved.

Motorway Signs

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his Department's policy and practice is on the use of electronic information signs on motorways. [95551]

Mr. Spellar: Variable Message Signs, on England's motorway and other trunk road network, are used to assist the police with local incident management and to advise drivers of strategic long distance diversions. Long distance diversions are selected from recommended strategies agreed with all involved parties.

Variable Message Signs are currently operated under a policy and procedures document jointly agreed by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Highways Agency.

Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will display alternative route information on electronic information signs on motorways, whenever a motorway closure occurs. [95552]

Mr. Spellar: The new National Traffic Control Centre (a 10-year private finance initiative contract awarded by the Highways Agency in 2001 to Traffic Information Services) will, from early 2004, offer real time advice to motorists using variable message signs sited at strategic positions around the motorways and other trunk road network.

Alternative route advice will be given when both (a) a suitable route with sufficient capacity to take extra traffic is available, and (b) when signs are available to convey the information.

Online Sales/Purchases

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) products, (b) goods and (c) services were (i) bought and (ii) sold online by his Department in each of the last five years. [97441]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department buys the following commodities online:

Commodity	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003
Travel Tickets	—	—	—	Yes	Yes
IT Equipment	—	—	—	Yes	Yes
IT Consumables	—	—	—	Yes	Yes
Stationery	—	—	—	Yes	Yes

The Department sells the following services online:

Rail Services (Bedfordshire)

Alistair Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 7 January 2003, Official Report, columns 105–06W, on Sandy-Bedford rail link, what estimate he has made of the levels of (a) lottery grant, (b) landfill grant and (c) other public money that would need to be made available to (i) bring into operation and (ii) maintain (A) the Sandy-Bedford Rail link and (B) the Bedford-Milton Keynes canal link. [97667]

Mr. Jamieson: The London to South Midlands Multi-modal Study issued its report on 4 February 2003. Copies will shortly be placed in the Libraries of the House. The regional planning bodies in the study area will now consider the recommendations, over the next few months. They will be consulting key stakeholders and the general public on the measures identified.

Railways (External Consultants)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the total value was of (a) technical and financial contracts, (b) technical consultants used on a call-off basis and (c) financial consultants used on a call-off basis by (i) the Rail Delivery Directorate, (ii) the Railways Restructuring Directorate and (iii) other directorates within his Department carrying out work relating to the railways, in each year since 1992. [93231]

Mr. Jamieson: The following table gives expenditure by this Department and its predecessors on all rail consultancies since 1992–93.

	£ million[1,2]
1992–93	6
1993–94	12
1994–95	17
1995–96	13
1996–97	9
1997–98	2
1998–99	10
1999–2000	7
2000–01	6
2001–02	15
2002–03[3]	24

[1] Rounded to nearest million
[2] Cash prices
[3] Estimate

It is believed that only a very small proportion of this expenditure relates to call-off contracts. The figures include expenditure on contracts for legal and other advice. The majority of the increase in expenditure in 2001–02 and 2002–03 is due to the costs of advice relating to Railtrack's administration.

Road Freight

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the amount of freight he expects to travel by road rather than rail as a result of the withdrawal of (a) freight facilities grants and (b) track access grants. [97340]

Mr. Jamieson: Freight facilities grants and track access grants have not been withdrawn. New applications have been suspended temporarily by the Strategic Rail Authority. Grants already agreed will continue to be honoured. Expenditure on freight grants is expected to be in the order of £40 million in 2003–04.

Road Schemes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road schemes (a) approved and (b) provisionally approved in (i) the targeted programme of improvements, (ii) multi-modal studies and (iii) the local transport settlements between 1997 to 2002, where the primary objective is economic regeneration. [97479]

Mr. Jamieson: The information is in the following table. We have, in total, added 72 schemes to the targeted programme of improvements and approved or provisionally approved 87 local transport schemes between 1997 and 2002, many of which will also promote economic regeneration although that may not be the primary objective.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Communications Bill

Michael Fabricant: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport during the Committee Stage of the Communications Bill, how many (a) clauses and (b) schedules were (i) fully debated, (ii) partly debated and (iii) not debated. [97789]

Dr. Howells: In its debates on the Communications Bill, Standing Committee E sat for 65 hours over 26 sittings. The original programme resolution for the Committee's proceedings was agreed by the Programming Sub-Committee at its meeting on 9 December 2002. This was approved without division at the beginning of the Committee's first session on 10 December 2002.

On two occasions during the Bill's passage through Committee, Programming Sub-Committee resolutions to move knives were agreed. This enabled hon. Members to focus on clauses of the Bill that they felt merited more detailed discussion. As a result of the agreed programme, the knives led to 101 clauses and five Schedules being moved forthwith by the Chair. It is worth noting, however, that, just because a clause was not reached by the Committee, it does not mean that substantive points on that clause were not raised and debated in full during earlier debates.

Domestic Violence

Margaret Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps she is taking to increase awareness of domestic violence in the British media. [97747]

Dr. Howells: None.

National Lottery

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the level of ticket sales of the National Lottery. [R] [97514]

Mr. Caborn: The National Lottery Commission have stated that ticket sales, since the start of the lottery to 9 February 2003, are £40.8 billion.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of National Lottery charitable contributions have been spent on cancer-related groups. [97513]

Mr. Caborn: The Community Fund has made 188 grants to the value of £13,516,037 to organisations directly involved in work relating to cancer. The Fund has awarded a further £23,651,116 to hospices whose client group will include people with cancer.

In total, therefore, £37,167,153 or 1.51 per cent. of total Community Fund grants (£2,458 million) has been awarded to projects relating to the care of those with some form of cancer.

In addition, £84 million is available from the New Opportunities Fund for projects that provide effective palliative care and support and information services for children and adults suffering from cancer and other life threatening conditions.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on the operation of the National Lottery franchise. [97515]

Mr. Caborn: Since the launch of the National Lottery, £13.9 billion has been raised for the good causes. Camelot was awarded the second licence as operator of the National Lottery in January 2002. The National Lottery Commission continues to have the duty to ensure that the National Lottery is properly run and that players are protected, while maximising the money raised for the good causes. We published a consultation document last year about the way in which the Lottery might be run and regulated in future; and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to announce our conclusions in due course.

Tourism

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the estimated marketing budget of the British Tourist Board is for the promotion of tourism in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) England. [97908]

Dr. Howells: The British Tourist Authority is a cross-border body whose purpose is to market Britain overseas as an attractive tourist destination. It does not hypothecate funds for particular nations or regions of Britain, but promotes Britain as a whole in a way which maximises the impact of its campaigns in individual markets overseas.

Union Anniversary

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the union of England and Scotland in 2007. [94269]

Dr. Howells: The UK Government have no plans at present to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the Union of Scotland and England.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Child Care

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of children living in poverty live outside the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards; and how many of them have access to child care places. [87967]

Maria Eagle: In 1999, 34 per cent. of children aged 0–4 living in households in receipt of means tested benefits lived in wards other than the most disadvantaged 20 per cent. We do not collect data on access to child care places specifically for this group of children. Local authorities' 2002–03 early years development and child care plans showed that, in April 2001, 12.3 places were available per hundred children aged 0–14 (or 0–16 with special educational needs) in wards other than the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards, higher than the 7.6 places per hundred children in the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards. Each early years development and child care plan includes targets to increase by March 2004 the number of child care places available both outside and within the 20 per cent. most disadvantaged wards.

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent representations he has received from child care organisations regarding the provision of child care to lone parents. [91061]

Maria Eagle [holding answer 16 January 2003]: We receive representations from time to time on issues relating to child care and its role in enabling parents—particularly lone parents—to work, learn and study; and we discuss these matters as part of our ongoing partnership with child care organisations.

As part of the recent interdepartmental review of child care, chaired by my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for Sure Start there was wide-ranging consultation with organisations with an interest in the issue.

In addition, the National Council for One Parent Families is a member of the Sure Start Voluntary Sector Forum chaired by my noble Friend.

Child Minders

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many full-time child minders there were in England in each year since 1997. [89311]

Maria Eagle: The available figures on the number of registered child minders are as follows.

Number of child minders for children under eight—England—1997–2001

As at 31 March	Total
1997	98,500
1998	94,700
1999	82,200
2000	75,600
2001	72,300

Note:
These figures have been rounded to the nearest 100.

These figures were published in Statistical Bulletin 08/01 "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 2001", a copy of which is available from the Library. An electronic copy of the bulletin is available on the Department's website www.dfes.gov.uk/statistics.

During the period 1997 to 2001 total child care places have increased. The returns from local authorities have shown year on year increases in the numbers of day nurseries, out of school clubs and holiday schemes. However, the numbers of playgroups and child minders have been declining. Many playgroups are converting to full day care and this means that they are re-classified as day nurseries rather than playgroups. The Department is encouraging this conversion by offering assistance to playgroups to extend their services to full day care in order to meet more parents' needs.

Higher Education Funding

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of funding to higher education institutions comes from (a) student contributions, (b) LEA funding and (c) foreign student fees across (i) all higher education institutions and (ii) each individual university in England. [83937]

Margaret Hodge: The information is in tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library. Fee income from local authorities and individual students cannot be separately identified but are included in the "Student Loans Company/Local Education Authority/Student Awards Agency for Scotland/Department for Education Learning Northern Ireland" and "Other" categories respectively. As well as individual student tuition fee contributions, the "Other" category will include fee income from Research Councils, other Government Departments, overseas organisations, and UK industry and commerce.

SCOTLAND

Air Quality

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) which local authorities in Scotland have completed ambient air quality (a) assessment and (b) plans; [96460]

(2) what measures she is taking to assist local authorities in Scotland in adopting ambient air quality plans. [96461]

Mrs. Liddell: Both local government and air quality are devolved matters, and are the responsibility of the Scottish Executive.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what annual emission of (a) NOx, (b) SOx and (c) CO2 was recorded for each Scottish airport in the last available year, classified by (i) aviation emissions, (ii) volume for each category of ground vehicle, (iii) type of power unit and (iv) type of fuel; [96465]

(2) what measures she is taking to encourage the British Airports Authority to introduce low emission vehicles in its Scottish airports; and what the outcome has been. [96464]

Mrs. Liddell: The management of BAA's vehicle fleet is an operational matter for the company. I understand that BAA has an air quality strategy which includes a commitment to assessing cleaner alternative fuels such as ULSD and LPG. The Government and the devolved administrations have in place a wide range of policies and programmes aimed at reducing gaseous emissions from vehicle fleets but there are no policies and programmes targeted specifically at airport operators.

There is no official data collected on emissions of the specified substances from aircraft and ground vehicles at airports.

Paper Suppliers

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who the suppliers are of her Department's (a) paper and (b) paper products. [91912]

Mrs. Liddell: My Department obtains its paper and paper products from the following suppliers: Glenmore Business Paper, Banner Business Supplies and Astron Document Services.

Child Poverty

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans she has to reduce child poverty in Scotland; and if she will make a statement. [94066]

Mrs. McGuire: The Government are taking a number of measures to tackle poverty in Scotland, including the National Minimum Wage; the New Deal and the new Tax Credits. We are committed to abolishing child poverty in a generation and to halving it by 2010. The action taken by the Government to tackle poverty and social exclusion is outlined in our fourth "Opportunity for All" report. Progress is monitored against a wide range of indicators. The Scottish Executive also produce a Social Justice Annual Report.

Hedgehogs (Outer Hebrides)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions she has had with representatives of Scottish National Heritage regarding hedgehog numbers in the Outer Hebrides; and if she will make a statement. [96194]

Mrs. Liddell: Nature conservation matters are devolved to the Scottish Parliament, and Scottish Natural Heritage gives advice to Scottish Executive Ministers.

Poverty

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what her latest estimate is of how many (a) pensioners, (b) children and (c) other people are living in poverty in each constituency in Scotland. [94067]

Mrs. McGuire: Poverty is a complex multi-dimensional problem. "Opportunity for All" sets out the Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion and presents the latest information on the indicators used to monitor progress. The Scottish Executive's strategy is contained in their Social Justice Annual Report. The data sources which the Government and the Executive use for income analysis are the Family Resources Survey and Households Below Average Income. The sample sizes are not large enough to allow analysis below the all-Scotland level.

Sewel Convention

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the Sewel convention has been invoked since the inception of the Scottish Parliament; and on how many occasions the convention was invoked at the initiative of (a) the Scottish Executive and (b) the UK Government. [97830]

Mrs. Liddell: The Memorandum of Understanding indicates there will be consultation with the Scottish Executive on policy proposals affecting devolved matters whether or not they involve legislative change. In practice, this means that there is ongoing dialogue between the Scottish Executive and Government Departments, including the Scotland Office. For this reason it is impossible to determine at whose initiative discussions about the use of the Sewell convention begin, as they usually take place in the context of wider and on-going discussions.

As a matter of principle, either the Government or the Scottish Executive can take the initiative in establishing whether Sewel consent is needed. It is for the Scottish Executive to indicate the view of the Scottish Parliament and to take whatever steps are appropriate to ascertain that view. The Scottish Parliament has agreed to 39 Sewell motions since its inception.

Telephone Helplines

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many telephone helplines are sponsored by her Department; and which of these helplines are charged at (a) national rate, (b) premium rate and (c) local rate. [95709]

Mrs. Liddell: No telephone helplines are sponsored by my Department.

Union Anniversary

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans she has to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the union of England and Scotland in 2007. [94271]

Mrs. Liddell: The Scottish Executive has established an advisory group on which my Department is represented, initially to review the plans to commemorate the Union of the Crowns, but in due course, to consider other important historical dates such as the Union of Parliaments.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans she has to host celebrations on the anniversary of the Union of the Crowns. [95505]

Mrs. Liddell: My Department is represented on the advisory group established by the First Minister to review plans to commemorate the Union of the Crowns. We will await their recommendations before deciding the role Ministers might play.

Vehicle Fleet

Mr. Donohoe To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what progress has been made, by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each (i) category of vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel, in each of the past three years, in renewal of her Department's vehicle fleet on a lower emission basis; [96432]

(2) what the annual rate has been at which her Department renewed its vehicle fleet by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each (i) category of vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel over the last three years. [96431]

Mrs. Liddell: My Department does not have a vehicle fleet.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Mileage Allowance

Norman Baker: To ask the President of the Council what total number of miles was claimed by hon. Members under the mileage allowance scheme in each year since 1997, broken down by journeys to and from (a) their constituency and London, (b) their homes and London and (c) other places; and what the total cost was in each year since 1997. [96470]

Mr. Robin Cook: I regret that information is not available in the form requested, and could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

However, the Department of Finance and Administration records the total payments made each year for Members' car mileage. Figures are available for payments made in respect of car travel undertaken in each of the last three financial years. The totals are as follows:

£ million

Year
1999–2000	3.85
2000–01	4.1
2001–02	3.85

Note:
These figures exclude car journeys undertaken as part of European travel.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Experiments

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the banning of the use of wild caught primates in experiments. [97130]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: In addition to the stringent requirements in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 regarding the use of non-human primates, the use of wild-caught non-human primates in scientific experiments is subject to supplementary additional considerations.

We announced in 1997 that we cannot foresee any circumstances under which we would be prepared to issue licences under the 1986 Act for programmes of work involving the use of Great Apes (chimpanzees, pygmy chimpanzees, gorillas and orang-utans), and that exceptional justification would be required for the licensed use of other types of non-human primates taken from the wild.

The 1986 Act provides that non-human primates, whether captive bred or wild-caught, can only be used when no other species are suitable for the purposes of the programme to be specified in the licence, or that it is not practicable to obtain animals of any other species that are suitable for those purposes. For the use of wild-caught primates to be exceptionally authorised, there must be no appropriate alternative, no suitable captive-bred animals available and the likely benefits of the programme of work would have to fully justify their use.

In respect of applications to use wild-caught non-human primates, the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate and the Animal Procedures Committee provide advice on a case by case basis on whether and on what terms such use should be licensed. Application of these stringent criteria has meant that first time use of wild-caught non-human primates in scientific procedures has not been licensed in the UK for some years.

Ashfield Young Offenders Institution

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) young offenders and (b) remand inmates housed at Ashfield are from Wales; to which young offenders institutions they will go; and how far those institutions are from Wales. [96911]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 10 February 2003]: On 6 February 2003, the total population of Ashfield was 219. Of this 219, four (or two per cent.) were unsentenced juveniles who came from Wales. 87 (or 40 per cent.) were sentenced juvenile prisoners whose area of origin was Wales.

The allocation of juvenile prisoners to Ashfield is under review. Whatever the outcome of the review, every effort will be made to ensure that the allocated location is appropriate to the individual prisoner's needs. This will include keeping the distance from the allocated establishment to their home area to a minimum, and that all necessary child protection issues are taken into consideration at the time of allocation.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers with HIV/AIDS have been refused support as a result of not claiming asylum on arrival at UK ports of entry since 8 January. [97093]

Beverley Hughes: Information of this nature is not collected about asylum claimants.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that asylum claimants are made aware of the consequences of a failure to claim asylum at ports of entry immediately on arrival in the UK. [97094]

Beverley Hughes: In order to provide advance publicity of the implementation of Section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 I made a Ministerial Statement on 28 November 2002, with a press release being issued on the same day. The press release was also issued to the foreign media in the United Kingdom and to the media in countries where we receive a high number of asylum applicants. A further press release was issued on 7 January 2003 and this resulted in further in-depth and comprehensive media coverage within the United Kingdom.

In addition, since 10 December 2002, posters advertising the change in policy have been displayed in arrival halls at major ports and airports. Further copies have also been displayed in the voluntary sector offices such as Migrant Helpline and the Refugee Arrivals Project.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum in this country have been received from (a) single Afghan males, (b) Afghan females and (c) Afghan families since November 2001. [97226]

Beverley Hughes: The numbers of Afghan single male, female and family asylum applications since November 2001 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The total number of applications from Afghans (excluding dependants) since November 2001 is given in the table.

Asylum applications[1] received in the United Kingdom, excluding dependants, by month, nationals of Afghanistan

[1] Provisional figures rounded to nearest five, with '*' = 1 or 2

Information on asylum applications by age and sex are published annually. In 2001, excluding dependants, there were 8,450 asylum applications from Afghan males, and 550 from Afghan females. The 2001 Asylum Statistics Bulletin is available from the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html. The 2002 Bulletin will be available later this year.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were (a) removed and (b) deported from the UK in each year since 1990; and how many of each category were asylum seekers; [97944]

(2) how many asylum seekers were forcibly removed or deported from the UK in each year since 1990. [97943]

Beverley Hughes: Data on the number of persons removed from the United Kingdom in each year from 1990 to 2001 are given in the attached table. With the exception of those persons leaving under the Assisted Voluntary Returns Programmes run by the International Organisation for Migration all removals are as a result of action taken by the Immigration service and as such can be regarded as enforced.

A breakdown of total removals in 2002 is not yet available but is due to be published on the Home Office web-site later in the year in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin "Control of Immigration: Statistics United Kingdom 2002".

www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html

The latest available data show that 7,780 principal asylum applicants and 1,825 dependants were removed in the period January to September 2002. Data for October to December 2002 are due to be published at the end of February on the Home Office website.

Child Protection

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many National Hi-Tech Crime Unit staff will (a) be dedicated to the policing of internet chatrooms, (b) have the priority of protection of children on the internet and (c) have specific training in dealing with child protection law; and what the framework for liaison between the internet crime squad child protection team and other police units will be. [96758]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 12 February 2003]: We set up the National Hi-Tech Crime Unit (NHTCU) as part of the National Crime Squad to combat national and transnational hi-tech crime within or which impacts upon the UK.This includes investigation of hacking, virus writing, extortion, fraud, drug trafficking and organised paedophilia.

Their organised paedophilia targets include paedophile rings operating within the internet who display a hierarchical structure, a high level of technical ability, the use of strong encryption, a knowledge of law enforcement techniques and international in nature. It also includes those persons profiting from the commercial exploitation of on line child abuse, through the provision of pay for view child pornography.

This specific technical role augments the policing provision for child protection by the National Crime Squad, National Criminal Intelligence Service and forces.

(a) Officers from the NHTCU are not routinely deployed to monitor internet chatrooms. This activity may occur in response to specific intelligence concerning a paedophile ring operating within a chatroom environment, or as part of an existing investigation.

(b) Approximately 25 per cent of NHTCU resources are engaged in the investigation of child abuse on-line. This equates to ten members of law enforcement and support staff encompassing intelligence, investigation and forensic examination roles.

(c) NHTCU investigators have received training from clinical psychologists in relation to the investigation of offences of child abuse on line. Any child identified at risk during the course of an investigation is immediately referred to the child protection team in the force where a victim lives.

The NHTCU does not have a specific child protection team, however, it is represented on both the national police strategic and tactical tasking and co-ordinating groups who receive intelligence concerning child abuse on line. Through these for a the NHTCU are linked to the 43 police forces in England and Wales, the National Criminal Intelligence Service, and international law enforcement.

Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have, as a result of breaching a community order, been deprived of any benefit to which they are entitled, or had the amount of such benefit reduced, pursuant to sections 62 to 66 of the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000; and when the sections will come into force in relation to all courts in England and Wales. [91013]

Malcolm Wicks: I have been asked to reply.

The community sentence and benefits measures aim to encourage greater compliance with community orders. Therefore sanctions only apply when people receiving the relevant benefit do not comply with their orders. The provisions were introduced in four pilot areas from 15 October 2001. A full and independent evaluation is being conducted which will inform any decision on future national implementation.

As at 15 January 2003, the cost to the Department of administering the Community Sentences and Benefits pilots running in four Probation Service areas was £403,736, of which approximately £262,000 relates to one-off start-up costs, including changes to the national computer systems.

Information on the total money withheld as a result of benefit sanctions following a breach of community order is not available. Information of the number of people who have lost benefit as a result of breaching their community orders, and the average weekly loss of benefit, is in the table. The figures for the average loss of weekly benefit should be used only as a guide to loss of benefit for individual offenders.

Benefit	Number of individuals	Average weekly loss of benefit (£)
Income Support	230	15.28
Jobseeker's Allowance	320	[1]48.29
Total	550	—

[1] After having a sanction imposed, 90 people have made successful hardship claims. This reduces the amount of benefit they have lost If these hardship claims are taken into account the average overall reduction in benefit is £33.19 per person per week.

Notes:
1. Data are based on clerical returns received at the DWP Information Centre by 13 January 2003, and relate to the period from 15 October 2001 to 6 December 2002.

2. Average weekly loss of benefit has been calculated on an individual recipient basis using the Jobseeker's Allowance payment system (JSAPS) and the income support computer system (ISCS).
3. There are four probation service pilot areas, Derbyshire, Hertfordshire, Teesside and West Midlands.

Correspondence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reasons the hon. Member for Yeovil has yet to receive a reply to his letter of 1 December 2002 to the Chief Executive of the Immigration and Nationality Department in relation to the Home Office Reference S1153646; and if he will make a statement. [97363]

Beverley Hughes: The Immigration and Nationality Directorate has no trace of receiving the hon. Member's letter. On 11 February 2003 he was asked that if he wished to supply a copy of his original letter, a reply would be sent to him as soon as possible. In any event, on 31 January 2003, in reply to a later letter dated 18 December 2002, he was informed that a decision had been reached in this case.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total budget for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board is for the financial year 2002–03; how much has been paid in compensation in each month of this financial year to date; and how much has been offered in compensation in each month but not yet paid out. [94438]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 30 January 2003]: Under the regime of resource accounting introduced by the Government in April 2001, Departments now account for their expenditure in terms of when resources are consumed, rather than when cash is paid. Thus, the Department now budgets for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme in terms of the amount of compensation committed in any particular year rather than simply the amount of cash expended in that year.

In 2002–03 the resource budget for compensation payable under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme was £183.264 million. An additional budget for scheme administration costs was £29.82 million.

The amount of money paid in compensation by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority in each month of 2002–03 to date is:

£ million

Month	Compensation Paid
April	27.2
May	27.4
June	18.3
July	15.5
August	18.5
September	14.3
October	15.7
November	22.5
December	15.3

Some £54 million of these payments related to awards offered in 2001–02 which score against the resource budget for that year.

It is not readily possible to say how much was offered in each month of the current financial year but not yet paid out because, for example, some applicants decide to appeal against the award offered. However, as at 31 December 2002, some £2.4 million worth of awards was due to be paid within 28 days, awards on offer amounted to £26.3 million, and other contingent liabilities amounted to £6.9 million.

Criminal Justice Policy Unit

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics are to be collected by the Criminal Justice Policy Unit; in what form; and how frequently information so obtained will be published. [94326]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Justice Joint Planning Unit has been reformed into the Criminal Justice Local Performance and Delivery Unit, and the Criminal Justice Strategic Planning and Analysis Unit. Neither unit collects statistics, but they will collate and disseminate statistics on performance-related issues to local criminal justice boards. The local criminal justice boards will publish information on their performance in their annual reports to their communities.

Deportations

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 701W, on deportations, if he will list, of the 634 who were deported during 2002 on completion of a custodial sentence, the offences they were convicted for and which country of origin they were returned to. [96017]

Beverley Hughes: The additional information requested is not available.

Firearms

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ban the import and sale of (a) replica, (b) blank-firing and (c) deactivated guns. [96906]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: We propose to introduce a new offence of possessing an imitation firearm in a public place without lawful authority or reasonable excuse. The police will be able to arrest anybody committing such an offence and to seize the articles involved. Any blank-firing or imitation pistol which can be readily converted to fire live ammunition is already regarded as a prohibited weapon. We have no plans to ban the sale or importation of guns which are not readily converted.

Independent Appellate Tribunal Judgment

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department received notification from the Independent Appellate Tribunal of its decision to reject the Home Office's appeal to the Tribunal in the case of Mrs. T. B. (TH/22817/2001; B1010649); when he intends to notify Mrs. T. B.'s representatives of the arrangements for her to collect her visa; and if he will make a statement. [97677]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office received the Immigration Appellate Tribunal's decision to refuse to grant the Secretary of State's application for Leave to Appeal to the Tribunal on 29 November 2002. The Home Office has now notified the High Commission in Islamabad of the outcome of the appeal. It is now the responsibility of the Entry Clearance Officer to notify Mrs. Begum of any decision to grant in the spirit of the Adjudicator's determination.

I apologise for the delay in notifying the High Commission. This was caused by an administrative error.

Murder Cases

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report from Sussex police in 2002 on the problems with securing murder verdicts for parents or carers accused of murdering their children due to joint enterprise considerations. [96025]

Hilary Benn: I believe the hon. Member is referring to the report produced by Sussex police for the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC) as part of their recent conference 'which of you did it?' I understand that copies of the Conference Report, including the paper from Sussex police will be available from the NSPCC in the next few weeks and I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the law for consideration of joint enterprise when pursuing murder cases against parents or carers accused of murdering their own children. [96026]

Hilary Benn: We accept that the law needs to be strengthened so that people jointly accused cannot evade justice by protecting each other. We are considering a number of possibilities in the light of recent work by the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (NSPCC) and the Law Commission. These possibilities include procedural measures at court but we are also considering whether changes are needed to the substantive law.

Over-lenient Sentences

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to extend the power to appeal against over-lenient sentences to sentences for burglary. [97298]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 11 February 2003]: We are not looking to legislate for this since primary legislation would not be required, but we are willing to consider whether it would be desirable to add burglary to the Unduly Lenient Sentencing scheme by way of an Order. I have asked my officials to look further into the matter.

This issue has been raised as an amendment in the Courts Bill during Committee Stage, and was debated on 11 February 2003.

Prisoner Suicides

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many suicides have taken place in prisons in the Greater London area in each of the last three years. [96245]

Hilary Benn: The following table covers the 31 apparently self-inflicted deaths in the last three years.

	2000	2001	2002	Total
Belmarsh	1	0	1	2
Brixton	2	2	2	6
Feltham	1	1	0	2
Holloway	1	1	1	3
Pentonville	1	3	1	5
Wandsworth	7	1	2	10
Wormwood Scrubs	1	1	1	3
Total	14	9	8	31

The general prison population contains a large number of prisoners with a combination of psychiatric disorders, alcohol and drug dependency, family background and relationship problems, histories of self-harm and previous abuse, all of which raise their risk of suicide and self-harm. Good care and support from staff saves many lives but such instances go largely unreported. The Prison Service's approach, in close partnership with other agencies such as the Youth Justice Board, and outside organisations such as Samaritans, is to better identify and support those who seem at greatest risk, with an approach that focuses on staff/prisoner relationships and the physical environment.

The Prison Service is currently developing a new suicide prevention and self-harm reduction policy through a programme of projects that aim to improve pre-reception, reception and induction arrangements; the exchange of information; the care of prisoners; detoxification; prisoners supporting each other, and learning from investigations into deaths in custody.

Prisoners

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are (a) female and (b) male of pensionable age; and what percentage of the total prison population each sex represents. [96020]

Hilary Benn: On 31 December 2002, there were 26 females and 692 males of pensionable age (0.04 per cent. and 0.99 per cent. of the total male and female prison population respectively).

Prisons

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total (a) operational capacity and (b) population of prisons in England and Wales was in each year since 1973. [95862]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is in the following table. The table shows annual figures for population level and useable operational capacity at Prison Service establishments in England and Wales, from 1973 to 2002, where such figures are available.

Total certified normal accommodation and population in Prison Service establishments from 1973–2002

Notes:

1. All figures rounded to the nearest hundred.
2. Population and useable operational capacity figures are annual averages. CNA figures are as at 30 June of each year. CNA figures pre-1980 are available only for the December of each year.
3. In-use CNA: the uncrowded capacity of the estate after adjusting for accommodation out of use.
4. Population figures exclude the numbers of prisoners held in police cells during that year. The averages are based on data for the last day of each month.
5. Useable operational capacity: the measure used for long-term estate planning purposes. The maximum number of prisoners the estate could normally hold is up to 2,000 less than the totals certified operational capacity.

Sex Offenders

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women held in prisons in England and Wales are serving a life sentence for sexual offences. [96247]

Hilary Benn: The number of male prisoners serving life sentences for sexual offences on 30 November 2002 was 550. There were no female prisoners serving life sentences for sexual offences on 30 November 2002.

Student Visas

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy to remove from the UK students who do not comply with the immigration rules for students visas, particularly with regard to attendance records; and how many students have been removed from the UK in the last 12 months for failing to comply with any requirements based on attendance records. [97678]

Beverley Hughes: Students are required, under paragraph 57(ii) of the Immigration Rules (HC395), to attend classes regularly for a minimum of 15 hours' organised daytime study per week, unless circumstances such as illness prevent them from doing so.Where a student comes to the attention of the immigration authorities for low or non-attendance, without good reason, their leave would be subject to curtailment and they would be subsequently removed.

A student is permitted to work for a maximum of 20 hours per week in term time, or full time vacation work. Where a student is found to be working but there are doubts about the quantity and quality of study, and it appears that his or her main purpose in being in the United Kingdom is to work rather than to study, administrative removal action may be taken on the grounds that they are not observing a condition attached to their leave.

If it can be established that a person entered the United Kingdom as a student but had no intention of studying, he or she can be treated as an illegal entrant, having gained leave to enter by deception.

Information on the number of student removals is not available.

Terrorist Attacks

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken by his Department to ensure the integration and training of (a) the armed forces, (b) the emergency services and (c) volunteer organisations in evacuation procedures in the event of an NBC terrorist attack on London. [96260]

Mr. Raynsford: I have been asked to reply.

I chair the London Resilience Cabinet Committee which overseas work to strengthen London's preparedness against terrorism. The London Resilience Committee reports to DOP(IT)(R)—which works to build the UK's resilience and ability to manage the consequences of major emergencies—and to the Civil Contingencies Committee which meets in times of crisis to mange the response. Since May 2002, a new strategic emergency planning regime has been in place in London, headed by the London Resilience Forum which I also chair, with the Mayor of London as my Deputy. Evacuation procedures are being fully considered in this context. Government departments and representatives of the emergency services, the military and key agencies are represented within these arrangements.

The integration of volunteer organisations in response to civil emergencies of all kinds is co-ordinated through local authority emergency planning officers in accordance with the arrangements set out in the publication "Dealing With Disaster".

Vehicle Fleets

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the annual rate is at which his Department and its agencies renew their vehicle fleets, by (a) volume and percentage for each category of vehicle, (b) type of power unit and (c) type of fuel. [96559]

Hilary Benn: The policy guidelines for vehicle replacement are:

Vehicle	Guidelines
Petrol cars/light vans	85,000 miles or five years
Diesel cars/light vans	120,000 miles or five years
Vans and minibuses	90,000 miles or seven years
Goods vehicles-7.5 tonnes	200,000 miles or 10 years
Goods vehicles-10 tonnes	300,000 miles or 10 years and over
Goods vehicles-16 tonnes	400,000 miles or 10 years and over
Articulated units-38 tonnes	500,000 miles or 10 years

The fleet profile by type and percentage as at November 2002:

Vehicle	Percentage
Cars/car derived vans	42
Off road vehicles	3
Vans/minibuses	32
Commercial vehicles	9
Miscellaneous vehicles (e.g. training vehicles)	8
Specialist vehicles (e.g. secure and perimeter vehicles)	6

Currently 79 per cent. of the fleet is diesel powered, 20.5 per cent. are fuelled by petrol and 0.5 per cent. are alternatively powered. Home Office environmental policy on vehicle replacement is that wherever possible vehicles purchased will encompass either dual fuel technology (e.g. liquid petroleum gas (LPG)/petrol) or be high-pressure direct injection diesel with particulate filters.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list information and communications technology courses available for young offenders serving sentences in young offenders institutions in England and Wales broken down by young offender institution; how many young offenders are enrolled on such courses; and how many computers are available to be used for education and training in young offenders institutions in England and Wales per young offender. [96170]

Hilary Benn: E-learning is part of the prison core curriculum and as such is available to all young offenders serving sentences in young offender institutions (YOIs) in England and Wales. All establishments offer a variety of qualifications including computer literacy and information technology (CLAIT) at levels 1 to 3, information technology key skills and the European Computer Driving Licence. Information on how many young offenders are enrolled in an information and communications technology (ICT) course at any one time is not currently available.

At present we estimate that around 690 computers are available in YOIs for educational purposes. We will increase this number, giving more young offenders the opportunity to gain important skills that can help them to find a job on release.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being taken by his Department to reduce the average distance of young offenders held in young offender institutions from their youth offending teams. [96171]

Hilary Benn: The juvenile secure estate is made up of Prison Service young offender institutions, local authority secure children's homes and privately-operated secure training centres. The Youth Justice Board commissions and purchases the places, and places individual offenders. Distance from home is a key factor in placement decisions.

In December 2002, 71 per cent. of young people in custody were within 50 miles of home. The Board's target is 90 per cent. in 2003–04. To achieve that the Board is currently reviewing the profile of the custodial estate and the catchment areas of establishments within it, taking account of the greater flexibility provided by the recent opening of 64 more secure training centre places.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Iraq

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what role there is for the Conflict Prevention Fund in Contingency Preparations for humanitarian operations in the aftermath of possible military action in Iraq. [97080]

Clare Short: No decision has been taken to launch military action against Iraq. The purpose of the Global Conflict Prevention Pool is to improve the effectiveness of the UK contribution to conflict prevention by reducing the number of people whose lives are affected by conflict, and reducing the potential sources of conflict. The Global Conflict Prevention Pool would not, therefore, be used to fund humanitarian operations following any military action against Iraq.

Capita

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 459W, on Capita, if he will give the (a) start and finish date, (b) value, (c) evaluation mechanism for successful delivery and (d) penalty charges for failure to deliver for each contract; whether penalty charges have been incurred; what the service level agreements were; what the contract numbers were; and if he will make a statement. [97336]

Clare Short: The contract details are set out in the following table. The contracts were completed successfully against the terms of reference. No penalty charges were incurred. There were no service level agreements for these contracts.

Contract number	Project title	Value (£)	Start date	End date
19984472	Ethiopia Police: Development Assistance	1,103,035	15 February 1998	28 May 2000

Democratic Republic of Congo

Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will place in the Library information received by her Department from the third report of the UN Panel of Experts on the Illegal Exploitation of Natural Resources in the DRC; and if she will request copies of all material collected in relation to allegations made in the report which she has found to be (a) inaccurate and (b) unsubstantiated. [97099]

Clare Short: We have yet to receive from the UN panel of experts the additional information sought corroborating the allegations made in the panel report against British companies and nationals in respect of the illegal exploitation of resources in the DRC. Once this information is received I will consider whether it is suitable for placing in the Library, taking into account any further action that may be needed in relation to the allegations.

EU Aid Budget

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will estimate how much money the United Kingdom transfers to the European Union as a contribution to the European Commission's Annual Aid Budget each year. [96899]

Clare Short: The following table gives figures for UK payments to the EC budget for aid and International Development for the past three years from DFID and other Government Departments. Further information is available in the latest edition of "Statistics on International Development" [pp. 126 Table 8]. A copy of this may be found in the Library of the House.

Kyrgyzstan

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her counterparts in (a) the United States of America, (b) the European Union and (c) Russia to encourage them to give aid to Kyrgyzstan; and if she will make a statement. [97166]

Clare Short: There have been no direct discussions with the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), the European Commission or Russia on aid to Kyrgyzstan. The United States already provides development assistance to Kyrgyzstan: around US$35 million in 2002. Up to 1999 the EU Tacis programme, to which the UK contributes, provided grant assistance of Euro 53 million to Kyrgyzstan, with a further Euro 16 million being allocated for the period 2000–03.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent meetings she has had with non-governmental organisations and international aid organisations regarding Kyrgyzstan; and if she will make a statement. [97167]

Clare Short: Officials from my Department and the DFID office in Bishkek meet with international NGOs and local Kyrgyz NGOs, on a regular basis: some of the NGOs are actively involved in DFID projects in Kyrgyzstan.

The DFID office in Bishkek takes a leading role in donor coordination in Kyrgyzstan. Representatives of the donor community, which includes the international aid organisations, attend monthly coordination meetings. My Department has several collaborative projects with the World bank. Closer links are being established with the Asian Development Bank with a view to working with them also in Kyrgyzstan.

St. Helena

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made in respect of developing air links with St. Helena; and if she will make a statement. [97160]

Clare Short: The St. Helena Government, with our agreement, has decided to seek proposals for private sector participation. A prospectus is being prepared as a basis for inviting responses from interested parties.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Public Appointments

21. Mr. Edwards: To ask the Minister for Women what measures she is introducing to increase the number of women applying for public appointments. [97613]

Ms Hewitt: My hon. Friend, the Minister for State at the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and I led a national outreach programme, that finished only in December 2002, to encourage more women to apply for public appointments. We have now published an excellent practical guide that enables others to take forward this approach.

Social Enterprises

Mr. Mole: To ask the Minister for Women what measures her Department takes to support social enterprise by women. [97615]

Ms Hewitt: Women already play an important part in social enterprises and DTI supports them through a wide range of activities. This will be strengthened through the implementation of the Government's three-year strategy for social enterprise, which I launched in July 2002.

WALES

Air Quality Plans

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which local authorities in Wales have completed Ambient Air Quality (a) plans and (b) assessments. [96459]

Peter Hain: That is a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

Cardiff International Airport

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what annual emission of (a) NOx, (b) SOx and (c) CO_2 was recorded for Cardiff International Airport in the last available year, classified by (i) aviation emissions, (ii) volume for each category of ground vehicle, (iii) type of power unit and (iv) type of fuel. [96454]

Peter Hain: This information is not held centrally and is a matter for the airport operator.

Flood Defences (Hampton Bishop)

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action the Welsh Environment Agency is taking to repair the weakness in the flood defence barrier by the Bunch of Carrots pub at Hampton Bishop, Herefordshire. [95654]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

Operational responsibility for flood measures rests with the local operating authorities, normally the Environment Agency (EA) and local councils, who decide which projects to promote and their timing. This Department provides grants for flood and coastal defence capital works and associated studies, which meet essential technical, economic and environmental criteria and achieve an appropriate priority score.

I understand that EA Wales is preparing a submission to Defra for approval of grant aid on a proposed scheme to strengthen and improve approximately 1 km of the existing embankment along the River Wye at Hampton Bishop, Herefordshire. The EA has identified this length as having a potential weakness in extreme flood conditions. Additionally the Agency, in co-operation with Herefordshire county council, has put into place an Emergency Response Procedure for Hampton Bishop. This would include the evacuation of residents in the event of the Agency issuing a Severe Flood Warning for the location.

Gwydyr House

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales who owns the headquarters of his Department at Gwydyr House in Whitehall, London; what his estimate is of (a) the capital value of this building and (b) the annual estimated rental cost; and if he will make a statement. [89951]

Peter Hain: My Department owns Gwydyr House.

(a) £1.7 million

(b) No recent estimate has been made of the annual rental cost.

Ministerial Visits

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the overseas visits of Welsh Office Ministers in each year from 1997–98 to 2002–03, setting out the (a) destination, (b) timing, (c) total cost and (d) reason for visit; and if he will make a statement. [90098]

Peter Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Postal Votes

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the number of postal votes applied for in Wales for the forthcoming elections to the National Assembly, broken down by (a) Assembly constituency and (b) local authority area. [91830]

Peter Hain: The figures are not held centrally. However, I know that a number of local authorities have taken positive steps to publicise the availability of postal votes. This has led to an increase in applications, which I welcome.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many days were lost due to sickness absence in the Department in 2002. [90530]

Peter Hain: The number of days lost due to sickness absence in my Department in 2002 was 206.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many working days were lost due to illness in his Department in (a) 2002 and (b) each of the preceding five years. [90747]

Peter Hain: My Department came into existence on 1 July 1999. The number of working days lost due to illness in my Department in (a) 2002 was 206 and (b) 2001 was 277, 2000 were 231 and 1999, from July to December, was 120.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in his Department in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93496]

Peter Hain: The Wales Office does not have any agencies or non-departmental public bodies. Since its establishment on 1 July 1999, there has been no reported absenteeism. The rate of sickness averages between 7.5 days in 1999 to 5.5 days in 2002 per staff year.

The Civil Service is committed to reducing sickness absence by 20 per cent. by 2010 (to 8.3 days per staff year). Wales Office average of sick leave is already below this target.

Vehicle Fleets

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what measures he is taking to encourage Cardiff International Airport Ltd. to introduce low emission vehicles in its operations; and what the outcome has been. [96455]

Peter Hain: That is primarily a matter for the National Assembly for Wales and I will draw his question to their attention because I attach real importance to reducing vehicle emission.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing

11. Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what efforts her Department is making to improve productivity growth rates in the manufacturing sector. [97629]

Alan Johnson: The Government's Manufacturing Strategy, published in May last year, identified seven key areas of activity for Government and industry that are crucial for manufacturing success. We are taking action in all of those areas to help British manufacturers improve productivity in very difficult global conditions.

Social Enterprises

12. Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the contributions that social enterprises can make to public service provision. [97630]

Mr. Timms: Social enterprises are already successfully delivering public services and we believe that they have the potential to play a far greater role. We are currently considering a number of ways in which their role may be increased.

Broadband

14. Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the help she gives rural businesses which have no access to broadband. [97632]

Mr. Timms: Broadband is available throughout the UK by satellite. Schemes funded through the UK Broadband Fund are helping rural small businesses to access broadband services. For example, the Remote Area Broadband Inclusion Trial (RABBIT) will subsidise some 2,000 small businesses' access to broadband for the first year.

Workplace Bullying

15. Linda Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what she is doing to tackle bullying in the workplace. [97633]

Alan Johnson: The Government are committed to addressing the problems caused by bullying in the workplace.

We believe that the best place for bullying to be tackled is where it happens—in the workplace itself. This means changing the culture in the workplace to one where bullying is unacceptable. The DTI is promoting best practice and workplace initiatives to tackle bullying through developing partnership between employers and employees.

The Government have established the Partnership Fund, which has launched a number of projects specifically focused on bullying and others that include its eradication as part of an overall culture change. We are also working with the HSE to develop a Relationship Management Standard which will provide a benchmark for employers to evaluate and improve workplace practices.

A net of legislation is already in place to protect workers from the most serious kinds of bullying, for instance in cases of discrimination or harassment. The Government publish guidance booklets on how this legislation can be used, and ACAS provide a nationwide telephone advice line offering assistance to employers and employees on bullying and other employment issues.

The Employment Act 2002 will take the safety net of legislation further by providing improved employment conditions for an additional six million employees who currently do not have access to adequate internal procedures to deal with discipline and grievance cases.

Supermarket Ownership

16. Mr. Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the effects on primary producers of the pattern of ownership of supermarkets. [97634]

Ms Hewitt: The Office of Fair Trading considers the effects on suppliers when reviewing any change in ownership or control of a business, including supermarkets.

ACT (Benefits Payment)

17. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with (a) the Post Office and (b) the Department for Work and Pensions about preparedness for the introduction of full Automated Credit Transfer for benefits payments from April. [97635]

Mr. Timms: Ministers and officials of the Department of Trade and Industry are working closely with colleagues from the Department for Work and Pensions and the Post Office on all aspects of the migration of benefits and pensions to direct payment and the introduction of universal banking services.

Aon Health Services

Jeff Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value is of the contract recently awarded to Aon Health Services for carrying out health assessments for compensation for services under the Government's vibration white finger compensation scheme. [97095]

Mr. Wilson: The contract for the Vibration White Finger (VWF) services medical assessment, awarded to Aon Health Solutions, is valued at around £6 million, based on the current projected volume of claimants.

Car Manufacturing

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many motor cars were manufactured in the United Kingdom during each of the last five years. [97539]

Alan Johnson: The information requested is as follows:

Number of cars produced in the United Kingdom, 1998–2002

Thousands

Year	Number of cars
1998	1,748
1999	1,787
2000	1,641
2001	1,492
2002	1,628

Disablement Benefit (Access)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received regarding the ability of disabled people to access their benefit entitlement at post offices by using a plastic swipe card and a numeric keypad. [97631]

Mr. Timms: The Department receives representations on a wide range of issues concerning the post office network. The Government and the Post Office are working to provide a high quality range of services for all our customers, including those who wish to use the Post Office card account. It is the responsibility of Post Office Ltd. as the service provider, to ensure that disabled people can access their benefits at post offices using a plastic swipe card and a numeric pad.

Earnings

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the gap between the average earnings of men and women is in (a) South East Scotland, (b) the Scottish Borders, (c) Scotland and (d) the UK. [97662]

Alan Johnson: In 2002 the gap between the average gross weekly earnings of men and women was 24 per cent. in Scotland and nearly 25 per cent. in Great Britain. (UK figures are not available). South East Scotland is not a unitary authority but for the purpose of this request, I have created data by adding Borders, East Lothian, Edinburgh and Midlothian local authorities which shows that there is an approximate 37 per cent. gap between men and women's average gross weekly earnings.

Sample represented for Scottish Borders is too small.

Essential Medicines (Poorer Countries' Access)

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she has taken to ensure poorer countries are able to access essential medicines since the World Trade Organisation failed to resolve the issue; and if she will make a statement. [97529]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 12 February 2003]: The Government continues to work with the EU and all other WTO members to try and reach agreement on the important issue of TRIPS and Public Health. We see the recently declared EU moratorium (on taking to Dispute Settlement any country exporting copies of patented medicines to other developing countries in need) as purely a stop-gap solution.

Access to medicines goes much wider than this aspect of intellectual property. The Government is committed to working holistically to solve issues of delivery, research and funding as well. For example, the Government has since 1997 committed £1.5 billion to strengthening healthcare systems in developing countries. The Government has also committed $200 million over five years to the Global Trust Fund to fight AIDS, TB and Malaria. In addition the 2002 budget set up a new tax credit available to companies who set up health-related research and development to fight HIV/AIDS, TB and Malaria in developing countries.

In addition a UK working group set up by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and chaired by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for International Development produced a report last November on Increasing Access to Essential Medicines in the Developing World (www.dfid.gov.uk). The Government continues to work with all members of this group to implement the recommendations as widely as possible.

EU Enlargement

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the opportunities for UK businesses arising from EU enlargement. [97619]

Ms Hewitt: UK business has already benefited from the removal of trade barriers with the fast growing economies of central and eastern Europe and this can be expected to continue with the expansion of the EU to create the largest single market in the world. The Department's officials are completing more detailed analysis, which we intend to publish as soon as possible.

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) assessment and (b) analysis her Department has conducted on the opportunities for UK businesses from EU enlargement. [96810]

Mr. Wilson: UK business has already benefited from the removal of trade barriers with the fast growing economies of central and eastern Europe and this can be expected to continue with the expansion of the EU to create the largest single market in the world. The department's officials are completing more detailed analysis which we intend to publish as soon as possible.

Gas NVQ

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice CORGI gave to (a) the HSE and (b) Ministers in March 2002 on the introduction of a new NVQ industry qualification for gas engineers. [91401]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: In March 2002, the Council for Registered Gas Installers (CORGI) gave advice solely to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE). On 21 March the CORGI Chief Executive wrote to advise HSE about how it proposed to deal with Transco's application for renewal of its registration from 1 April 2002. CORGI stated their view that the Rules for Registration needed to be applied equitably to all CORGI registered businesses and that to make an exception to these in the case of Transco would have been inappropriate. CORGI gave no advice to Ministers at that time.

CORGI advised that they had decided to re-register Transco with effect from 1 April 2002 but only for work undertaken by the 325 engineers then holding either unexpired certificates of competence issued under the Health and Safety Commission's Approved Code of Practice (AcoP) or certificates under the Nationally Accredited Certification Scheme (ACS). Throughout the remainder of the year the registration progressively covered the work of additional engineers as they completed training and assessment under the newly-introduced National Vocational Qualification which is aligned, for gas safety issues, with the ACS. As at 16 January 2003 the registration covered a total of 2,707 engineers holding valid certificates of competence for emergency service work.

Manufacturing

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many manufacturing businesses operated with five employees or fewer in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [97949]

Mr. Wilson: Table 1 shows estimates of the number of businesses in the manufacturing sector with four employees or fewer for the time period start-1997 to start-2001. It is not possible to provide figures for the number of businesses with five employees, as this breakdown is not available.

Table 1 Manufacturing sector: number of businesses with 0–4 employees: United Kingdom

	Number
Start-1997	252,380
Start-1998	262,265
Start-1999	264,230

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people and what percentage of the work force in Pendle (a) were employed in manufacturing industry in 1977 and (b) are employed in manufacturing. [97369]

Alan Johnson: In 1977 the total work force in Pendle numbered 32,201 of which 21,031 (65.3 per cent.) were employed in manufacturing.

In 2001 the total workforce in Pendle numbered 30,700 of which 11,400 (37 per cent.) were employed in manufacturing.

Post Office (Banking Services)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will ensure that the Post Office card account is given equal promotion and advertising as high street banking options. [95442]

Mr. Timms: The Post Office card account is one of a range of accounts which people will be able from this year to receive benefit payments into. Our aim is that people should be able to choose the option that suits them best. Information about all the options is being supplied to benefit, pension and tax credit customers by the Department for Work and Pensions and the Inland Revenue. Post Office Ltd. will also be making its own material available to customers.

Post Offices (Portsmouth, South)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the financial loss to post offices in Portsmouth, South as a result of the change in the payment of benefits from over-the-counter to direct bank transfer; and if she will make a statement. [97273]

Mr. Timms: No such assessment has been made. The migration of benefit payment to ACT begins this year and the Post Office's strategy is to respond to that challenge with a range of banking and other services. How the migration of benefit payments affects the revenue of post offices will depend on a number of factors, not least how benefit recipients and other post office customers respond to change. The income from the various contracts Post Office Ltd. has with the spending Departments and various financial institutions, and the remuneration of sub-postmasters for banking services, is a commercial matter between the parties.

Public Liability

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses have ceased trading in the last 12 months citing a rise in public liability premiums from their insurers. [96823]

Mr. Wilson: Firms generally cease trading as the result of a combination of factors, including increases in costs. It is therefore very hard to estimate the effect of insurance premium increases on the number of businesses that have ceased trading. The Government's current review of employers' liability insurance aims to examine the impact of the current system on employers, and make recommendations accordingly. Full details of this review are at: http://www.dwp.gov.uk/publications/dwp/2002/health-safety/eli-review/index .htm.

Small Retail Businesses

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant, to the answer of 8 January 2003, Official Report, column 248W, on small retail businesses, how many work-force jobs are accounted for by small retail businesses. [97778]

Mr. Wilson: The following table shows estimated employment in the UK at the start of 2001 in sector 52 (retail trade except of motor vehicles). SMEs (0 to 249 employees) accounted for approximately 37 per cent., and small businesses (0 to 49) 33 per cent., of all employment in this sector. These figures are based on a total business population of about 3.75 million (about 7,000 of these are large businesses) with total employment of about 22.6 million (about half of which is in SMEs).

Table 1: Amount of employment (000s) in the private sector and public corporations[1]

Wind Farms

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many planning consents are being sought for (a) offshore and (b) land-based wind farm projects in (i) England, (ii) Wales, (iii) Scotland and (iv) Northern Ireland; and if she will list the locations. [97068]

Mr. Wilson: The following table lists the number of wind farm planning consents currently being sought. This list covers those applications which are the responsibility of central Government, and does not include smaller developments which fall under local planning authorities.

	(a) Offshore wind farms	(b) Onshore wind farms
England	8	1
Scotland	1	7
Northern Ireland	0	5

The applications for offshore wind farms in England are located at Kentish Flats (off Whitstable, Thames Estuary), Lynn (off Skegness, Lincolnshire), Inner Dowsing (off Ingoldmells, Lincolnshire), Cromer (off Mundesley, Norfolk), Gunfleet Sands (off Clacton-on-Sea, Essex), Barrow (off Walney Island, Cumbria), Burbo Bank (off Crosby, Merseyside) and Shell Flats (off Cleveleys, Lancashire).

There is also one application for an onshore wind farm in England and Wales, under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989, under consideration at Little Cheyne Court, Romney Marsh, Kent. Proposals for wind farms in England and Wales with a capacity of 50 MW or below fall to be determined by the local planning authority under the normal planning regime.

Powers under section 36 of the Electricity Act 1989 as they apply to Scotland have been devolved to the Scottish Executive. The onshore wind farms under consideration in Scotland are located at the Windy Standard extension (Dumfries and Galloway); Whitelee (East Renfrewshire, South Lanarkshire and East Ayrshire); Paul's Hill (Moray); Black Law (North Lanarkshire, West Lothian and South Lanarkshire); Farr (Highland); Braes o'Doune (Stirling) and the Crystal Rig extension (Scottish Borders).

There is one offshore project under consideration by the Scottish Executive at Robin Rigg (Solway Firth).

The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for Northern Ireland are currently dealing with applications for onshore wind farms at Bin Mountain (Strabane, County Tyrone), Omagh (in the townlands of Lough Hill, Castlecraig, Curraghmacall and Drummahon, County Tyrone), Fermanagh (in the townlands of Garrane, Mullaghfad, Corraleek and Corragiint, and Rosslea, County Fermanagh), Fermanagh (in the townlands of Callagheen and Garrison, County Fermanagh) and Fermanagh (in the townlands of Glenarn, Stranahone and Stranadarriff, Tappaghan Mountain and Lack, County Fermanagh).

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the contribution to be made by (a) off-shore and (b) land-based wind farm projects over the next ten years as a percentage of overall electricity generation. [97070]

Mr. Wilson: The Government have not made estimates for the contribution that onshore and offshore wind farms will make to our overall electricity generation over the next 10 years. The Government's target for renewable energy is that, by 2010, 10 per cent. of electricity should be supplied from sources eligible under the Renewables Obligation. While we expect both onshore and offshore wind to make a substantial contribution to this target, no specific targets have been set in relation to the contribution of any particular form of renewable energy to the overall 10 per cent. target.

NORTHERN IRELAND

A29

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will identify the automatic traffic monitoring sites situated along the A29 route. [97011]

Angela Smith: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Member in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Air Quality Plans

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to assist local authorities in Northern Ireland in adopting ambient air quality plans; how many local authorities have completed ambient air quality (a) plans and (b) assessments; and if he will list them. [96556]

Angela Smith: District councils in Northern Ireland came under a statutory duty to undertake air quality assessment and management only with the recent enactment of the Environment (Northern Ireland) Order 2002. The Order requires district councils to identify areas where air quality standards are not likely to be achieved within specified timescales and to draw up action plans setting out the proposals they, and other relevant authorities, have for the reduction of air pollution levels in those areas.

However, in anticipation of the new legislation, all 26 district councils had voluntarily completed an initial screening of pollution sources having a significant impact within the district council area in order to identify pollutants of concern locally. As a consequence, all 26 district councils are now engaged in a more detailed assessment of the pollutants identified in the initial screening. No district council has yet reached the stage of drawing up air quality action plans.

To assist with the review and assessment process, the Department of the Environment has provided grant-aid of some £1 million to district councils in the 2001–02 and current financial years. Similar provision has been made for continuation of the grant scheme in 2003–04.

The Department proposes to issue shortly technical guidance on the review and assessment process and on the preparation of action plans. This guidance has been drawn up by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs in conjunction with the devolved Administrations. The Department also proposes in the near future to issue for consultation a policy guidance paper designed to assist district councils, and other relevant authorities, to meet their air quality management obligations.

Belfast International Airport

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he is taking to encourage Belfast International Airport Ltd. to introduce low emission vehicles in its operations. [96554]

Angela Smith: There are no measures aimed specifically at introducing low emission vehicles specifically into airport operations within Northern Ireland. In broader terms, there are national polices in place to reduce emissions from vehicles generally, such as the Powershift programme, administered by the Energy Saving Trust. This programme was established in order to stimulate the market for clean fuel vehicles in the UK. Financial support is available under the programme to help with the purchase of vehicles which are proven to offer emissions benefits and which have shown to be technically viable.

In addition, the European Auto-Oil programme has introduced tighter European vehicle emission and fuel quality standards. These are reflected in the Air Quality Strategy for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The key elements of the programme are:

stringent emission standards for cars and light vans, which applied to all new vehicles sold from 1 January 2000 (known as Euro III standards); more stringent standards applying from 1 January 2006 (Euro IV standards); tighter fuel quality specifications which applied to all petrol and diesel sold from 1 January 2000, with a further tightening of the specification to apply from 1 January 2005; and a ban on general marketing of leaded petrol since 1 January 2000.

A further element of the Auto-Oil programme established a more stringent emissions standard for heavy-duty diesel engines from 2000. These engines are used in a wide range of vehicles, including lorries and buses. From 2005 almost all heavy-duty diesel vehicles will effectively be fitted with particulate traps—which can reduce particle emissions (PM_{10}) by up to 90 per cent.

Care Services

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent in Northern Ireland in providing (a) occupational and physiotherapy, (b) home help and (c) district nursing services in each of the last three years. [96782]

Mr. Browne: The following table details the amounts spent in providing the services:

	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Occupational/physiotherapy	12,716	14,726	15,759
Home helps	41,999	44,033	44,608
District nursing	26,904	28,611	32,321

Gardner Report

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place in the Library the findings of the report on education by Professor John Gardner commissioned by the Northern Ireland Assembly prior to its suspension. [88798]

Jane Kennedy: The Assembly Education Committee commissioned Professor Gardner to undertake research to assist its consideration of the review of post-primary education but did not have the opportunity to consider the report prior to suspension. I understand that, until the Committee has had an opportunity to consider and approve the report, it cannot be made publicly available and I am, therefore, unable to place a copy in the Library.

Historical and Cultural Buildings

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will bring forward legislation to prevent the destruction and diminution of important historical and cultural buildings in Northern Ireland. [96391]

Angela Smith: The Department of the Environment has powers under the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to list buildings of special architectural or historic interest. Once listed, it is an offence to execute, or cause to be executed, any works for the demolition of such a building, or for its alteration or extension in any manner that would affect its character as a building of special historic or architectural interest. The Department also has powers to control the demolition of buildings in Conservation Areas designated under the Order.

The draft Planning (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003, will introduce some important new enforcement powers and increase from £5,000 to £30,000 the maximum level of fine that can be imposed on a person on summary conviction for breaching a Listed Buildings Enforcement Notice. The draft Order will also introduce the possibility of custodial sentences, for those found guilty of an offence, of up to six months on summary conviction and up to two years on conviction on indictment. The draft order was laid at Westminster on 16 January 2003, and was debated in the House of Commons Select Committee on 4 February 2003. The draft order is due to be debated in the House of Lords on 13 February 2003 and, subject to Lords' agreement it is expected that it will be taken at the February Privy Council meeting.

In addition, the draft Order will introduce a fast track mechanism for listing buildings of special architectural or historic interest, which are considered at risk of demolition or adverse alteration. It will also introduce a new control over the demolition of buildings, by making it clear that demolition comes within the meaning of development for planning purposes. For the time being, however, it is my intention to apply this new control over demolition only to the demolition of buildings in Areas of Townscape/Village Character.

I have no plans at present to bring forward any further legislation on this subject.

Housing Executive Tenants

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the rent increases for Northern Ireland Housing Executive tenants have been, expressed as a proportion of GDP, for each year since 1997. [96787]

Mr. Browne: Northern Ireland Housing Executive rent increases from 1997 are as follows:

	GDP (Percentage)
1997–98	GDP (2 per cent.) + 2 per cent. = 4 per cent.
1998–99	GDP (2.8 per cent.) + 2 per cent. = 4.8 per cent.
1999–2000	GDP (2.5 per cent.) + 2 per cent. = 4.5 per cent.
2000–01	GDP (2.5 per cent.) + 2 per cent. = 4.5 per cent.
2001–02	GDP (2.5 per cent.) + 0.5 per cent. = 3 per cent.
2002–03	GDP (2.5 per cent.) + 0.5 per cent. = 3.5 per cent.
2003–04	GDP (2.25 per cent.) + 1 per cent. = 3.25 per cent.

IFI Belfast Plant

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what (a) discussions with and (b) representations to the Irish Government have taken place over its handling of the closure of the IFI Belfast plant since the workers ended their sit-in at the plant. [96779]

Mr. Pearson: I have made regular representations to the Irish Government since the difficulties at IFI first became known and these have continued following the ending of the workers' sit-in at the Belfast plant. These representations have included correspondence to and, recently, separate meetings with both Mary Harney TD, Irish Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Employment, and one of her senior officials.

Through these meetings and in my correspondence I have consistently expressed my concerns about the treatment of the Belfast work force and I have sought the assurance of the Irish Government that they are doing everything they can to ensure their treatment is fair and equitable.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people it is estimated are eligible for Minimum Income Guarantee in Northern Ireland. [96857]

Mr. Browne: At October 2002 there were 76,101 people claiming the Minimum Income Guarantee. At present, the proportion of people who are eligible but have not claimed cannot be precisely estimated.

It is hoped that information from the new Family Resources Survey, will start to become available in the autumn. This information will enable take-up to be estimated.

The Social Security Agency continues to actively encourage uptake of Minimum Income Guarantee to ensure that all people claim and receive all the help they are entitled to.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have applied for the Minimum Income Guarantee in Northern Ireland in each year since its introduction. [96858]

Mr. Browne: Minimum Income Guarantee was introduced in April 1999. Since then, almost 50,000 pensioners have applied.

The figures in the following table set out the number of applications made each financial year.

Year	Applications
1999–2000	10,923
2000–01	15,904
2001–02	14,721
2002 up to December	8,297

Old People's Dwellings

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many old people's dwellings in Northern Ireland have been allocated to people under 60 years of age. [96854]

Mr. Browne: Currently some 6,500 properties out of a total 17,500, one or two bedroomed bungalows have been let to people under the age of 60, some of whom have a disability. In addition there are approximately 5,000 ground floor flats which are considered to be suitable for the elderly but figures on age profile of the occupants is not readily available.

Public Transport (Free Fares)

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to introduce free fares on public transport for women aged 60 and over in Northern Ireland. [96855]

Angela Smith: Currently under the Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Scheme both men and women over 65 are eligible for free travel on public transport. Under equality legislation any reduction in the eligibility age would have to apply to both men and women. However, we have no plans at present to reduce the age of eligibility from 65.

Senior Citizens

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding has been provided by Belfast Regeneration Office to projects and programmes dealing with senior citizens in each financial year since 1997. [96853]

Mr. Browne: Detail of funding provided by Belfast Regeneration Office (BRO) to those projects and programmes which benefit senior citizens are listed in the following table.

Financial year	Total amount of funding allocated to senior citizens by BRO (£)
1997–98	7,475.45
1998–99	3,100.00
1999–2000	2,623.00
2000–01	9,670.00
2001–02	977.71
2002–03	0

Sports Council

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money was allocated to the NT Sports Council in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99, (c) 2000–01, (d) 2001–02 and (e) 2002–03. [96953]

Angela Smith: The total amount of money allocated to the Sports Council in the years listed is as follows:

	£ million
1997–98	3.009
1998–99	2.558
2000–01	4.618
2001–02	3.778
2002–03	5.748

Traffic Volume (Moy Village)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will commission a new survey for traffic volume in Moy village. [97012]

Angela Smith: I have asked the Chief Executive of Roads Service to write to the hon. Member in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH

Colombia (Human Rights)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what recent discussions he has had with the US Administration regarding (a) developments and (b) the abuse of human rights in Colombia; and if he will make a statement; [97480]

(2) what discussions he has had with the Government of Colombia regarding (a) abuses of human rights and (b) persecution of human rights workers; and if he will make a statement; [97510]

(3) what discussions he has had with UK and UN representatives at the UN regarding human rights surveillance by the United Nations in Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [97481]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave her on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 354W.

Arms and Drugs Trafficking

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information exchange systems there are between (a) UK and (b) EU agencies to monitor and tackle arms and trafficking. [97488]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK regularly exchanges information with its EU partners, both bilaterally and in multilateral fora such as the EU Committee on Conventional Arms Export Policy (COARM), the Wassenaar Arrangement, the Nuclear Suppliers' Group, the Australia Group and within the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Under the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports, which relates to conventional arms, there is a Denial Notification (DN) system. EU Code of Conduct DNs are issued for all military listed and dual-use goods which have been refused a licence for export by a member state. No member state may export essentially identical goods, without first consulting the member state that issued the denial notification. Member states also contribute information about their arms export policy and licensing activity for inclusion in an annual report.

Only a minority of EU member states have legislation which controls the trafficking of arms.

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Overseas Law Enforcement Liaison Officer network has taken to co-ordinate efforts to tackle arms and drugs trafficking. [97491]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Drug and other law enforcement liaison officers represent a range of UK law enforcement agencies and are funded and tasked to combat specific aspects of organised crime. If in the course of their duties, liaison officers discover information that is relevant to the work of other UK law enforcement agencies, that information is shared rapidly as appropriate.

Bermuda

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Bermuda on constitutional change. [96670]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My noble Friend Baroness Amos discussed the constitution review process with the Premier of Bermuda, the Attorney General and Senator David Burch in London in September 2002.

British Indian Ocean Territory

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the use of British Indian Ocean Territory in relation to the international war against terrorism. [96669]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Diego Garcia, part of the British Indian Ocean Territory, is the location of a US defence facility which was used as an important strategic staging post for coalition forces during the military campaign in Afghanistan; it contributed to the defeat of Taleban and al-Qaeda forces.

British Prisoners Overseas

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries in which British (a) men and (b) women are serving a prison sentence. [96611]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The following table lists the countries in which British men and women are imprisoned and gives the numbers of men and women detained in each as at 31 December 2002. The figures represent those prisoners who either requested consular assistance or who gave permission to the local authorities to notify the British Consul of their arrest.

Burma

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which people elected at the last elections in Burma are under house arrest there. [97119]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our latest information is that there are no MPs-elect from the 1990 election in Burma currently under house arrest.

However many MPs-elect continue to be subject to close surveillance, checks, general infringement of civil liberties and harassment from the police and security services.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which people elected at the last national elections in Burma are political prisoners in Burma; and what information he has collated regarding the location of each prisoner. [97120]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Information about Burmese political prisoners is hard to obtain and often incomplete. My latest information is that there are 18 MPs-elect currently detained on political grounds in Burma. The prison sentences quoted are often only arbitrary figures. It is common for prisoners to be kept detained long after their notional sentences have expired. Many political prisoners are also detained even when suffering serious ill-health.

Of the MPs listed, U Doe Htaung and U Khin Maung Swe have each served more than their seven year term but have still not been released. And U Kyaw San, Dr. Than Nyein, Daw May Win Myint, U Ohn Maung, U Sein Hla Oo, and U Toe Po all have serious health problems.

The MPs' details are as follows:

Name	Prison term	Prison
U Min Soe Lin (Dr.)	7 years	Unknown
U Min Kyi Win	7 years	Unknown
U Yawsi	Unknown	Myitkyina
U Khun Myint Tun	7 years	Kalay

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has collated about the number of British tourists who visited Burma in each of the past two financial years. [97252]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is our policy not to encourage tourism to Burma. We have drawn to the attention of travel organisations the views of the Burmese democratic opposition that tourism is inappropriate at present due to the political and human rights situation there. As part of this policy, Burmese tourism officials are included in the European Union visa ban and asset freeze.

HMG does not have figures for the final destination of those who travel from the UK. Official Burmese figures, which are often unreliable, indicate that 8,424 UK visitors passed through Rangoon in 2001 and 8,620 in 2002. However these figures include all categories of visitors, including UK passport holders of Burmese origin who are visiting family members.

Capita

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 9 January, Official Report, column 351W, on Capita, if he will give the (a) start and finish date, (b) value, (c) evaluation mechanism for successful delivery and (d) penalty charges for failure to deliver for each contract; whether penalty charges have been incurred; what the service level agreements were; what the contract numbers were; and if he will make a statement. [97339]

Mr. Rammell: Our two contracts with Capita relate to staff recruitment services. One is for the recruitment of administrative assistants (contract PC-R 1/00)and the other for the recruitment of specialist staff (contract PC-R 2/00). The value of the contracts over their lifetime is estimated at £917,000 and £1.06 million respectively, £861,000 of which is taken up by expenditure on advertising.

Both contracts commenced on 1 November 2000 and will end on 31 October 2003. They comprise a number of separate recruitment campaigns and we routinely assess performance after each one has been completed. No arrangements for penalty charges are included in the contracts, but we have the option to terminate them if the company were to default on its commitments. Performance levels to date have been satisfactory.

Chechnya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Russian Government on the future referendum to take place in Chechnya. [97538]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not, as yet, raised this issue with the Russian government. However, we do intend to discuss the matter at official level during the next round of our human rights dialogue with Russia, scheduled for early March.

Commonwealth Institute

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who the (a) directors and (b) trustees of the Commonwealth Institute are. [96882]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since January 2000 the affairs of the Commonwealth Institute have been conducted by a charitable company limited by guarantee: Charity Registration Number 1078736; Company Registration Number 3736792 (England and Wales).

The Trustees of the Charity, who are also the Directors of the Company, are Miss Judith Hanratty, Right Hon. Lord Fellowes,

HE The High Commissioner for Barbados Mr. Peter Simmons,

HE The High Commissioner for Malta Dr. George Bonello Du Puis,

HE The High Commissioner for New Zealand, Right Hon. Paul East QC (appointed 7 December 2000, resigned 14 February 2002),

HE The High Commissioner for New Zealand Hon. Cedric Russell Marshall,

HE The High Commissioner for Nigeria Dr. Christopher Kolade,

HE The High Commissioner for the United Republic of Tanzania Mr Hassan Omargumbo Kibelloh,

HE Right Hon. Don McKinnon, Commonwealth Secretary General,

Mr Algy Cluff,

Mrs. Helen Robinson OBE.

Computer Fraud

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of computer (a) hacking, (b) fraud and (c) theft his Department recorded in 2001–02; and on how many occasions computer systems have been illegally accessed by computer hackers (i) within and (ii) outside his Department. [97559]

Mr. Rammell: The number of cases of (a) computer hacking detected was three in 2001 and one in 2002. All of these were perpetrated by persons outside the Department.

No cases of (b) fraud have been detected in 2001 or 2002.

The number of cases of (c) computer theft detected was three in 2001 and none in 2002. The perpetrators are unknown.

Kimberley Process

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to recommend the introduction of certification schemes similar to the Kimberley Process for (a) timber and (b) coltan. [92054]

Mr. Rammell: There are no firm plans to introduce arrangements similar to the Kimberley Process to regulate the trade in timber or coltan. It is not yet clear that something akin to the Kimberley Process, which was developed for a very specific purpose and has only been implemented since 1 January, could be effective in preventing the exploitation of other natural resources.

Energy Supplies (Security)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) which countries he has identified as posing a threat to the security of energy supplies; [92175]

(2) what current international security risks he has identified as posing a threat to energy supplies. [92178]

Mr. Rammell: There are uncertainties in the world oil market, including concerns about supplies from Iraq. However, currently the only loss of supplies is from Venezuela, and OPEC has already announced that it will increase output to help alleviate the shortfall. OPEC has also reaffirmed its commitment to general market stability. In addition, the International Energy Agency stands ready to take action if the need arises—for example, on the occurrence of a significant supply disruption—including co-ordinating a release of oil stocks by its members.

EU Budget Information Company

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 381W, on EU Budget Information Company, how many officials participate in the management committee on the expenditure of EU information budget funds in candidate countries; how often they meet; and if he will place the agenda and minutes of their meetings in 2002–03 in the Library. [96173]

Clare Short: I have been asked to reply.

The Phare Management Committee is responsible for oversight of EC pre-accession aid programmes. The Information and Communication Programme is one of these and the 2003 financing proposal was agreed at the recent Management Committee meeting on 7 February 2003. One official was present. The Commission will administer this programme, both in Brussels and through its in-country delegations. I will arrange for the agenda of that meeting, and the minutes once they have been ratified, to be placed in the Library. We do not expect the Phare Management Committee to have any further involvement in this programme in the current year.

External Consultancies

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92227]

Mr. Rammell: The cost of consultancy services from external consultants is as follows:

£000

	FCO	BBC World Service	British Council	Wilton Park
1995–96	17,650	n/a	72	8
1996–97	11,800	n/a	459	26
1997–98	15,800	662	1,618	13
1998–99	14,500	499	1,643	3
1999–2000	14,000	242	1,797	4
2000–01	17,900	98	2,397	4
2001–02	20,100	42	2,280	4
2002–03 (Forecast)	23,000	87	1,991	12

The BBC World Service could only provide figures for 1995–96 and 1996–97 at disproportionate cost.

These figures cover the usual consulting roles e.g. for advising on options and feasibility in the initial stages of a project. They exclude the cost of whole projects being implemented by outside consultants e.g. Cap Gemini/ Ernst Young who are main contractors for the installation of the FCO's PRISM project.

So far as the FCO is concerned, the vast majority of expenditure is associated with our major Information Communications Technology (ICT) and Estate construction programmes. Consultants have also advised on legal, financial and personnel issues and provided support in areas where we have skills shortages. Increasing expenditure over the last three years is associated with the growth of our ICT programme which is being used to support business change. Such projects include FTN, a new global telecommunications network and PRISM, a new integrated management information system covering finance, personnel, procurement and payroll.

Iain Hook

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to receive the official report from the Israeli authorities into the death of Iain Hook on 22 November 2002. [96772]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We understand that an Israeli internal report is almost complete. We have consistently made it clear that the Israeli authorities should provide a full written account of Mr. Hook's death to his family.

International Court

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people (a) have been tried at the International Court in The Hague and (b) are in custody who will in the near future be put on trial at the International Court; and if he will make a statement. [97533]

Mr. Rammell: The 18 judges (including Mr. Justice Fulford from the UK) of the International Criminal Court were elected on 7 February and they will be sworn in on 11 March. The Prosecutor of the Court is expected to be appointed in April; until then the Court is not able to issue indictments. There have been no trials as yet; neither are there any detainees. We are continuing to work with other States Parties to identify a Prosecutor for this important new institution.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on the proposals of the Greek Presidency of the EU for an emergency summit to be convened on Iraq. [96923]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Greek Presidency have called meetings of Foreign Ministers and of heads of Government for 17 February. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary look forward to attending.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many pages of documents the Government passed on to the (a) UNMOVIC and (b) IAEA inspectorates since 24 September 2002. [96925]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have shared a large amount of information with the UN inspection teams by various means, including paper documentation and through personal briefings. It is not possible to say precisely how many pieces of paper have been passed over without commissioning someone to question people on how many pieces of paper they have given or received.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions he has had with the United Nations regarding their estimates of the number of (a) children under five at risk of death, (b) mothers and children needing food and (c) people needing shelter in the event of a war in Iraq; and if he will make a statement; [97552]

(2) what discussions he has had with aid organisations regarding the possible impact of a war against Iraq on existing food aid deliveries; and if he will make a statement; [97550]

(3) what discussions he has had with Save the Children regarding research they have carried out on the impact of any impending war against Iraq on Iraqi children; and if he will make a statement. [97551]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No decision has been made to take military action against Iraq. As such my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has not recently discussed Iraq with the aid organisations.

North Korea

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the risk to international security from North Korea; and what action his Department is undertaking to re-introduce international inspectors to the country. [97089]

Mr. Rammell: We deplore North Korea's recent actions, including the expulsion of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) monitors from Yongbyon, and the stated intention to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. We have repeatedly made clear that North Korea must re-admit the inspectors and comply with its international obligations in full. We are working closely with the United States and regional partners, and through the IAEA, for a peaceful solution. The IAEA Board of Governors met on 12 February to discuss the matter further.

Organised Crime

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made since the 2002 London Conference on organised crime with the development of an EU wide, co-ordinated approach to tackle arms, drugs and people trafficking. [97490]

Mr. MacShane: At the London Conference the EU reached agreement with the countries of South Eastern Europe and the wider international community on an international strategy (the London Statement) for tackling organised crime in the region. This focused on raising standards, building public support for action against crime, and improving regional cooperation. Each of the countries of the region additionally agreed to take a series of priority measures to deliver this strategy.

The Greek EU Presidency, working closely with the European Commission and EU member states, has put the issue high on their agenda. It will be an important theme at the EU's Thessaloniki summit with Balkan countries in June.

The next EU Presidency (Italy) has clearly indicated its intention to maintain a high priority for this subject.

UN Resolutions

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to update his Department's Table of 1998 of Draft Resolutions in the United Nations Security Council that have been vetoed by Members. [97083]

Mr. Rammell: The table is currently being updated. It will be complete and available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website by June.

UN Security Council

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his policy is on granting India a permanent seat on the UN Security Council; and what steps he is taking in relation to this. [97642]

Mr. Rammell: The UK supports enlargement of the Security Council to a maximum of 24 members, including expansion in both the permanent and non-permanent membership.

We fully support India's candidacy for a permanent seat on the Security Council: the requirement to make their case lies primarily with the aspirants.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the British Government have had with European partners concerning the French Government's invitation to President Mugabe for the Franco-African Summit in Paris on 19–21 February; and if he will make a statement. [96363]

Mr. Rammell: We are in regular contact with our EU partners about this issue. It was discussed at the GAERC on 27 January. It has subsequently been discussed by Permanent Representatives to the EU on 30 January, 5 February and on 12 February. We have argued consistently for the most robust rollover of measures possible, including the travel ban.

HEALTH Care Homes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether (a) his Department and (b) the Social Services Inspectorate have required Lancashire county council to close older people's residential care homes. [96742]

Jacqui Smith: Neither the Department nor the Social Services Inspectorate (SSI) has required Lancashire county council to close care homes. The decision to close a care home rests with the council or, if it is a privately owned home, the owner of the home.

I have received a number of representations about the situation in Lancashire and I have asked the SSI to keep me updated on any developments or decisions made by the council about the future of the residents involved.

Child Protection

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding his Department has allocated in 2003 to advertising for child protection social workers in (a) England and (b) abroad; and in which countries the advertisements will be placed. [96077]

Jacqui Smith: The Department launched the national social work recruitment campaign in October 2001, backed by funding of £1.5 million. The campaign comprises national advertising, leaflets, posters, local and national public relations activity, a helpline and a website. It is intended to raise the profile of all social work and does not solely focus on child protection. No attempt is being made through the campaign to recruit social workers from abroad.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Canadian Government regarding the recruitment of child protection social workers. [96078]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has not held discussions with the Canadian Government regarding the recruitment of child protection social workers. The recruitment and employment of social workers, whatever their specialism, is the responsibility of individual employers.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent guidance was issued to employment agencies regarding working in local authority social services departments in child protection. [96079]

Jacqui Smith: The Department has not issued guidance.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are in each local authority social services department in England for child protection social workers. [96088]

Jacqui Smith: We do not hold central information on vacancies in each local authority social services department in England for social workers.

A survey undertaken by the employers organisation found that, across all local authority social services departments in England as at 30 September 2001, around 10 per cent. of all field social worker posts were vacant. The rate was slightly higher for children and family field social worker posts, at 11.3 per cent.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many basic grade social work vacancies there have been in field work teams dealing with child protection work in each local authority area in each year since 1997. [97090]

Jacqui Smith: We do not hold central information on vacancies in each local authority social services department in England for social workers.

A survey undertaken by the employers organisation found that, across all local authority social services departments in England as at 30 September 2001, around 10 per cent. of all field social worker posts were vacant. The rate was slightly higher for children and family field social worker posts, at 11.3 per cent.

The only historical data is for 2000, when the rate was 16.0 per cent.

Children in Care

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he (a) has taken and (b) is planning to take to encourage children in care to become involved in local community projects. [96121]

Jacqui Smith: The Quality Protects programme, launched in 1998, aims to ensure better life chances for children in care and £885 million has been provided over five years to support the objectives of the programme.

The Government want to see improved opportunities for vulnerable young people in local community projects involving leisure, the creative arts and sporting activities. The Government encourage councils to form partnerships between the Quality Protects programme and other local projects in the community to make sure that this happens. A key Quality Protects principle is to listen and take account of the views of young people in the design, delivery, and evaluation of services.

Children Trusts

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many bids he has received from local authorities to become pilot projects for children trusts. [97139]

Jacqui Smith: The deadline for applications from local authorities to become pilot children's trusts is 31March 2003 and so we have yet to receive any formal applications.

There has, however, been a significant level of interest shown at all three of the information conferences on children's trusts that we held for local authorities and their partner agencies in December 2002 and January 2003.

Delayed Discharges

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the response to his consultation into delayed discharge; and what aspects of the Community Care (Delayed Discharges etc.) Bill were altered to take into consideration the views of those who submitted their views to the consultation. [97144]

Jacqui Smith: An analysis of responses to the consultation document was carried out and a summary of this has been placed in the Library. I have taken these responses fully into account when developing policy on delayed discharge.

Medium-Secure Units

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients are awaiting transfer from high security hospitals to medium-secure units; and what proportion of these patients have been waiting for more than three months. [95904]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 6 February 2003]: The information requested is shown in the table.

High secure hospital	Number of patients awaiting transfer from high secure hospitals to medium secure units	Number of patients waiting for transfer for more than three months
Ashworth	6	6
Broadmoor	22	20
Rampton	10	9

These figures relate to patients for whom an alternative placement has been agreed with a receiving facility and in respect of whom the Home Secretary's consent to a move has been obtained where necessary.

The latest available figure as at September 2002 of the number of patients who have already moved to other secure units from the three high security hospitals under the accelerated discharge programme was 65.

Operation Cancellations (Hull and East Riding)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations were cancelled for non-clinical reasons in Hull and the East Riding in each year since 1997; what percentage of operations were cancelled as a proportion of admissions in each year; and what is the national average for the number of operations cancelled for non-clinical reasons. [92848]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is available in the Library.

Secure Mental Health Beds

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in secure mental health wards in (a) West Sussex, (b) East Sussex and (c) Surrey in each of the last five years. [96098]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not collected centrally at this level. Statistics on the availability of beds in secure units are collected yearly on a national basis. Figures for the south east region are shown in the table.

This information is available on the website (www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/statistics).

Ward classification: mental illness (excluding residential care) secure unit—south east region

Year	Available beds	Occupied beds	Percentage occupancy
1996–97	222	180	81.1
1997–98	243	227	93.4
1998–99	251	225	89.5
1999–2000	240	224	93.4
2000–01	281	258	91.7

Social Workers

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many social workers working with vulnerable children have been dismissed in each of the last five years in (a) Haringey social services, (b) Ealing social services, (c) Brent social services and (d) Enfield social services. [96042]

Jacqui Smith: It is the responsibility of the individual local authority, as the employer, to maintain records relating to their employment policies, procedures and actions in relation to dismissals. The Department does not collect data centrally.

Written Questions

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many named day written parliamentary questions tabled between 15 October 2002 and 5 February 2003 received (a) a substantive answer on the named day and (b) a holding answer; [97816]

(2) how many named day written questions were tabled between 15 October 2002 and 5 February 2003; how many that received a holding answer were given a substantive answer (a) within three days, (b) within seven days, (c) within 14 days, (d) within 28 days and (e) over 28 days. [97795]

Ms Blears: The Department received 803 named day written parliamentary questions between 15 October 2002 and 5 February. 258 were answered by the day named, 13 have yet to be answered, and 532 have been replied to substantively after being given a holding answer. The further breakdown requested is shown in the table.

Interval (in calendar days after the holding answer) within which the substantive answer was given	Number of PQs
0–3	212
4–7	157

PRIME MINISTER

Anglo-French Aircraft Carrier

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his announcement in Le Touquet, how his plan for France and the United Kingdom to have one aircraft carrier permanently available will work in practice. [97177]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom already maintains at least one of its three aircraft carriers (CVS) available for operations at any time.

One of the aims of closer UK-French carrier co-operation is to maximise the availability of aircraft carriers from European nations. The two countries intend to achieve this by exploring mechanisms for harmonising activity cycles. For example, it would be sensible to ensure that major maintenance periods were planned, where possible, so that the maximum number of assets (both hulls and air groups) could be available at any one time.

A series of joint working groups will explore how best to achieve this aim. These discussions, which have already begun, are expected to continue as the new UK and French carriers are brought in to service.

Chequers

Nick Harvey: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what have been the running costs of Chequers in each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement; [95527]

(2) how many (a) full time, (b) part time and (c) temporary staff have been employed at Chequers in each of the last five years; if he will list their principal duties; what percentage of the total budget for the running costs of Chequers has been made up by the annual grant from public funds in each of the past five years; if he will list the dates he has been in residence at Chequers in each of the past two years; and to what uses Chequers has been put when he has not been in residence. [95526]

The Prime Minister: Chequers was established under the Chequers Estate Acts 1917 and 1958 and is administered by independent trustees who receive an annual grant from public funds towards its maintenance and to cover civilian staff employed at Chequers in accordance with the Acts. In the last five years the grant has been:

Year	£
1997–98	259,218
1998–99	317,645
1999–2000	326,661
2000–01	327,183
2001–02	393,018

The Government have agreed to contribute 50 per cent. of the cost of a new roof at Chequers and the grant from 1998–99 onwards includes £50,000 per annum towards the roof fund. The grant for 2001–02 includes £25,000 towards urgent heritage repairs.

The Government also pay for service staff stationed at Chequers. Over the same period expenditure-net of VAT refunds-has been:

Year	£
1997–99	215,191
1998–99	232,570
1999–2000	270,186
2000–01	285,592
2001–02	241,448

Responsibility for staff at Chequers rests with the administrative trustees of the Chequers trust. The annual grant is not a fixed percentage of running costs. As a private trust the accounts are confidential.

My family and I have used Chequers in a variety of ways, both official and private, consistent with the wishes of the donor, Lord Lee, and the Chequers Estate Acts.

Union Celebrations

Mr. Swire: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to celebrate the 300th anniversary of the union of England and Scotland in 2007. [94270]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given to him by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport today.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Child Poverty

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will set a universal indicator of child poverty to be used by the Government. [94637]

Malcolm Wicks: We launched Measuring child poverty: a consultation document in April 2002. We will publish preliminary conclusions from the consultation in the spring. Further technical work, with experts in the field will be necessary before finalising the detail of any new measure.

Child Support, Pension and Social Security Act

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how much money in total has been withheld by way of retention or kept back by way of deprivation in relation to orders made pursuant to sections 62 to 66 of the Child Support, Pension and Social Security Act 2000; and what the total administrative costs incurred through such orders are; [91012]

(2) when he will answer the question of 15 January 2003 from the hon. Member for Woking, concerning moneys withheld by deprivation; [95069]

(3) when he will answer the question of 15 January 2003 from the hon. Member for Woking concerning breaches of community orders. [95074]

Malcolm Wicks: The community sentence and benefits measures aim to encourage greater compliance with community orders. Therefore, sanctions only apply when people receiving the relevant benefit do not comply with their orders. The provisions were introduced in four pilot areas from 15 October 2001. A full and independent evaluation is being conducted which will inform any decision on future national implementation.

As at 15 January 2003, the cost to the Department of administering the Community Sentences and Benefits pilots running in four Probation Service areas was £403,736, of which approximately £262,000 relates to one-off start-up costs, including changes to the national computer systems.

Information on the total money withheld as a result of benefit sanctions following a breach of community order is not available. Information of the number of people who have lost benefit as a result of breaching their community orders, and the average weekly loss of benefit, is in the table. The figures for the average loss of weekly benefit should be used only as a guide to loss of benefit for individual offenders.

Benefit	Number of individuals	Average weekly loss of benefit (£)
Income Support	230	15.28
Jobseeker's Allowance	320	[1]48.29
Total	550	—

[1] After having a sanction imposed, 90 people have made successful hardship claims. This reduces the amount of benefit they have lost. If these hardship claims are taken into account, the average overall reduction in benefit is £33.19 per person per week.

Notes:

1. Data are based on clerical returns received at the DWP Information Centre by 13 January 2003, and relate to the period from 15 October 2001 to 6 December 2002.
2. Average weekly loss of benefit has been calculated on an individual recipient basis using the Jobseeker's Allowance payment system (JSAPS) and the income support computer system (ISCS).
3. There are four probation service pilot areas: Derbyshire, Hertfordshire, Teesside and West Midlands.

Pensions (Protected Rights)

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions under what circumstances a member of a pension scheme can benefit from the protected rights part of the pension fund before the age of 60. [97319]

Mr. McCartney: The only circumstances in which a member can benefit from the protected rights part of their pension fund before age 60, is where the trustees or managers of an occupational scheme are satisfied that the member has a life expectancy of 12 months or less. However, the Green Paper, "Simplicity, security and choice: Working and saving for retirement" (Cm 5677) published on 17 December 2003, includes a proposal to lower the age restriction on protected rights so that they may be taken at the same time as other rights. On the same date, the Government published "Simplifying the taxation of pensions: increasing choice and flexibility for all" which proposes to extend to personal/stakeholder pensions the provision allowing benefits to be taken early in the case of serious ill health.

Benefit Claimants

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how his Department will treat benefit claimants who fail to respond to requests to inform the Department what method of payment they have chosen. [92625]

Mr. Oliver Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on how his Department will treat those benefit claimants who fail to respond to requests to inform the Department about the method of payment they have chosen. [93585]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department is contacting customers and providing them with information (including letters and leaflets), which clearly sets out the account options as part of the move to Direct Payment. Customers will then be able to consider the options available and choose the account that best meets their needs and circumstances. They will be asked to provide details of their chosen account so that the Department can begin to pay their benefit or pensions by Direct Payment.

Over the next two years orderbooks will be phased out and Direct Payment will become the normal method of paying benefits and pensions from April 2003. From 2005 orderbooks will no longer be an option and customers will have to be paid by an alternative method.

It has always been recognised that there will be some customers who are unwilling or unable to use any of the banking options or the Post Office card account. For these people we are currently exploring the options available to ensure they receive their benefit at outlets which will include the Post Office.

Benefit/Pensions

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate, for each major benefit and pension, how much of the expenditure of his Department is received by each decile within the UK income distribution; and if he will make a statement. [97355]

Mr. McCartney: Such information as is available is presented for Great Britain in the table.

Child benefit	12	15	12	12	11	10	9	7	7	6

Notes:

1. The estimates presented show expenditure by equivalised income deciles based on 'Households Below Average Income' (HBAI) for the financial year 2000–01. The series is derived from the Family Resources Survey which does not include Northern Ireland. The latest year for which data are available is 2000–01.
2. The estimates are presented both for income Before Housing Costs (BHC) and for income After Housing Costs (AHC), in line with HBAI conventions. Households are assigned to income deciles according to their income including all benefits.
3. All results are estimates, and may be affected by sampling error, reporting error and any differences between groups in their willingness to respond to the Family Resources Survey. Results are presented as percentages; estimates of total expenditure, by benefit, from this survey may not match actual expenditure.
4. Housing and community charge/council tax benefit figures are total amounts paid to beneficiaries, irrespective of the source of funding. Therefore the figures include benefit spending reimbursed by DWP, spending on rent rebates financed within local authorities' Housing Revenue Accounts, benefit spending financed from local authorities' general funds, and benefit spending within the National Asylum Support Service budget.
5. Retirement pension and MIG are shown together as the latter may be misreported as the former, in the Family Resources Survey.
6. In accordance with HBAI methodology, no allowance has been made for any extra costs facing disabled people, when assigning their households to an income decile.

Child Benefit

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of the proportion of child benefit decisions that were correct in the last five years; when he started setting targets on child benefit accuracy; and what the targets are. [92626]

Malcolm Wicks: Performance targets for benefit delivery and accuracy have been set for many years. The current Child Benefit Centre business plan includes an accuracy target of 98 per cent. for new claims.

Payment accuracy figures for child benefit show a consistently high level of achievement by Child Benefit Centre.

Year	Payment accuracy[3]
1997–98[1]	99
1998–99[1]	100
1999–2000[2]	98
2000–01[2]	98
2001–02[2]	99

[1] Figures for 1997–99 reflect the finding of the Chief Adjudicator Officer, who was responsible for reporting on standards of decision making in the Department. Following introduction of new Decision-Making and Appeals (DMA) legislation in 1999, the function of the Chief Adjudication Officer ceased.

[2] Child Benefit Centre findings.

[3] Payment accuracy refers to the payment of the correct amount of benefit to the correct person.

In addition, under DMA legislation, the Secretary of State now has a legal obligation to report on the standards of decision making in the Department for Work and Pensions. The Secretary of State's first DMA report was for the year 2000–01. He reported that 57 per cent. of child benefit decisions were correct. For child benefit, this report was concerned only with the decision making process, not with the outcome—accuracy of payment. It is quite possible for there to have been a technical error in the process but for the payment to be entirely correct. This applies with particular regard to evidence, in particular the retention of original documents required by the monitors when checking decisions made on review.

Decisions resulting from such reviews were classed as errors regardless of whether the award itself is correct. Figures for 2001–02 have not yet been reported but indications are that around 77 per cent. of decisions were correct, again reflecting a DMA monitoring specification that concentrated on the process and not on the outcome—payment accuracy. For 2002–03, the DMA monitoring specification closely aligns the process and payment accuracy to give a more realistic indication of decision-making standards. Emerging findings indicate an accuracy level of 99.6 per cent. for 2002–03.

Child Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions which areas are piloting the child support reforms IT system; and of those areas, which are testing cases calculated using the (a) existing rules and (b) new rules. [91294]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Steven Webb, dated February 2003:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply from me.

You ask which areas are piloting the child support reforms IT system; and of those areas which are testing cases calculated using the (a) existing rules and (b) new rules.

All offices which process child maintenance applications now have access to the new IT system. It is being used to process a small proportion of cases on the basis of existing rules. No offices are directly involved in testing the application of the new rules.

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many driving licences have been removed from non-resident parents for failure to pay child support to parents with care since this measure was introduced; and what the date was in each case. [94430]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Andrew Selous, dated February 2003:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You ask how many driving licences have been removed from non-resident parents for failure to pay child support to parents with care since this measure was introduced; and what the date was in each case.

There have been 2 non-resident parents who have been disqualified from driving for failure to pay child support. The intention of the relevant legislation is however to use the existence of this power to encourage more parents to meet this responsibility with out a court appearance. I believe that it is having this beneficial effect.

Child Support Agency (Scotland)

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many cases are being dealt with by the Child Support Agency; and how many cases were received in each of the last five years in (a) Scotland and (b) Fife. [93556]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from D. Smith to Mr. J. MacDougall, dated February 2003:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You ask how many cases are being dealt with by the Child Support Agency; and how many cases were received in each of the last five years in (a) Scotland and (b) Fife.

The number of cases currently being dealt with by the Child Support Agency is 1,349,213.

I'm afraid I do not have precise numbers with relation to the amount of cases received in the last five years in Scotland and Fife. My best estimate is:

Year to 31 March	Scotland	Fife
1999	43,000	1,400
2000	32,500	850
2001	31,000	800
2002	31,000	500

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93047]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department treats very seriously any suspicion of misuse of computer systems by staff and takes firm action in any cases that arise. All such cases, if proven, result in disciplinary action being taken against the offender leading to either a disciplinary penalty or dismissal. In addition over the last five years three members of staff have been prosecuted for computer misuse offences.

The table provides details of the number of proven cases by category in each year. All these cases have resulted in disciplinary action being taken. Machinery of Government changes make year on year comparisons difficult.

Computer misuse

Category	Number of proven cases
	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
Unauthorised access to computer systems	30	72	56	86	29
Use of unauthorised software	0	8	3	5	3
Manipulation of computer systems	0	7	0	14	2

1. The figures provided for 2002–03 cover the year to date and represent proven cases only. Several investigations are ongoing, but have not been included, as the results are not known yet.
2. Only the figures for 2002–03 relate to the Department for Work and Pensions. Previous figures relate to the Department of Social Security.

Definition of Categories

Unauthorised access to computer systems.
This is generally where staff access records and there is no genuine business need to do so.

Use of unauthorised software.
This includes the loading and use of non-departmental approved software onto departmental systems. This could include games or other programmes downloaded from the internet or brought in from home.

Manipulation of computer systems.
Where the perpetrator has manipulated computer programmes or data dishonestly e.g. to alter or substitute records, to destroy or suppress records, or to duplicate or create spurious records.

Demography

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what recent discussions he has had with European colleagues regarding a EU-wide approach to problems arising from changes in the average age of the population of Europe; [88874]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with European colleagues regarding pension reforms; and what issues were addressed and what conclusions were reached. [88876]

Malcolm Wicks: Whenever possible, we take the opportunity to exchange views with European Union counterparts on the challenges of ageing populations to employment strategy, social protection and social inclusion. The principal discussions in this area have been on the effect of demographic changes on the sustainability of pension systems where we regularly take the opportunity to exchange views with European Union counterparts on respective national approaches to pensions issues. The Lisbon European Council in March 2000 identified this as a significant issue in the context of its programme for economic reform. The United Kingdom has contributed to the voluntary exchange of information and good practice by member States within a framework of common objectives covering adequacy, financial sustainability and modernisation agreed during the Swedish Presidency of the EU.

As part of this process the European Commission publiched a Draft Joint report on Adequate and Sustainable Pensions in December 2002 based on national contributions. The draft Joint Report is due for adoption at the Employment and Social Afairs and Ecofin Councils on 6 and 7 March 2003, prior to presentation to Heads of Government at the Spring Council.

Departmental Budget

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the increase in his Department's budget in each year since 1980–81, in real terms; and if he will make a statement. [96814]

Mr. McCartney: The Department for Work and Pensions came into being on 1 April 2001. Consequently, there are no comparable figures prior to this date. The final provision for 2002–03 has yet to receive parliamentary approval and therefore a comparison with expenditure for 2001–02 cannot be made. The current expenditure plans of the Department for Work and Pensions are contained in Tables 1 to 11 of the Departmental Report, "The Government Expenditure Plans 2002–03 to 2003–04" (Command 5424).

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many applicants for disability living allowance were (a) granted on first application and (b) successful on review in the Orkney and Shetland constituency in each of the last five years. [96759]

Maria Eagle: The number of disability living allowance claims which were (a) granted on first application and (b) successful on review in the Orkney and Shetland constituency in the last five years, is detailed in the table.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people claim Disability Living Allowance in (a) Haltemprice and Howden, (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire and (c) England; and if he will break down the figures by disabling condition. [97736]

Maria Eagle: Entitlement to DLA is based on the extent to which a severely disabled person requires attention, supervision or watching over by another person and/or has walking difficulties as a result of their disabilities not on a particular diagnosis or condition.

The information requested is contained in the following tables.

Government Information (Disabled People)

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to improve access to government information about disabled people for organisations in the voluntary sector which have been contracted to deliver (a) Workstep, (b) Job Broking and (c) other programmes under the New Deal for Disabled People. [95702]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Department's statistical publications provide a very wide range of information about disabled people. Arrangements are in place for making additional and more detailed results available on request, subject to restrictions of confidentiality and data quality.

All personal information held in social security records is regarded as confidential, and will not normally be disclosed to third parties without the consent of the person concerned.

We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Greater London Assembly

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what financial assistance his Department gave to the Greater London Assembly in 2002; and for what projects. [95845]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Department for Work and Pensions did not provide any financial assistance to the Greater London Assembly in 2002.

Health and Safety

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what advice Ministers have received from the Health and Safety Commission on the responsibility of company directors for health and safety, as referred to in the DETR document "Revitalising Health and Safety-a strategy statement", of June 2000; and what plans he has to introduce legislation to make this a statutory responsibility. [92097]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Government and the Health and Safety Commission are committed to encouraging boards of directors to take responsibility and provide leadership for ensuring that health and safety is properly managed.

The Health and Safety Commission published guidance in July 2001, "Directors' responsibilities for health and safety". The guidance has attracted considerable interest among private, public and voluntary sector organisations.

The HSC is carrying out research to evaluate the effectiveness of the guidance in helping to promote greater board responsibility for health and safety. Preliminary findings reveal that the Government and HSC strategy together with a number of other factors are encouraging boards to take a greater interest and responsibility for health and safety. HSC has undertaken to report to Ministers in summer 2003 on the effectiveness of this strategy, the success of the voluntary approach and the need for further legislation.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many successful new claims for Incapacity Benefit and its predecessor benefits were made by (a) men and (b) women in each of the last 25 years; [94238]

(2) how many new claims for Incapacity Benefit and its predecessor benefits were refused because of inadequate contribution records for (a) men and (b) women in each of the last 25 years. [94241]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The available information is in the tables.

The following table shows the IB disallowed at onset figures due to failing the contribution conditions, as a percentage of all new claims.

	New claims to IB	New claims to IB disallowed at onset	Disallowed claims as a proportion of total new claims to IB (%)
13 April 1995 to 31 March 1996	1,054,340	382,445	36.3
1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997	1,062,815	439,645	41.4

1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002	823,650	350,890	42.6

Notes:
1. Disallowed at onset figures may still result in an award of IB credits.
2. CDU new claims figures may not result in an award of benefit or credits, as they include "accident declarations" etc.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest five.
4. Figures are not collected by gender.

Notes:
1. From September 1980, spells of less than four days ceased to be classed as a claim to benefit except under certain circumstances.
2. Statutory Sick Pay was introduced on 6 April 1983 for the first eight weeks of illness, this was extended to the first 28 weeks of illness from 6 April 1986.
3. Incapacity Benefit replaced Sickness Benefit and Invalidity Benefit from 13 April 1995.
4. Figures include 'Credits Only' cases.
5. Figures include claims that have subject to linking. Linking provisions exist to protect people who qualified for Incapacity Benefit under their previous contribution conditions where they move into work and return to benefit within the linking period.

Independent Schools (Health and Safety)

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps are taken to ensure that asbestos surveys are carried out by experts and that their safety guidance is found in independent schools. [94386]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations 2002, which have recently been made, will from 21 May 2004, place a new duty on those who manage asbestos in non-domestic premises. This includes independent schools. It requires them: to assess whether those premises contain asbestos; to assess the risk from asbestos; and to take action to manage the risk from asbestos. The duty does not specifically require a survey. However, if duty holders decide, as part of their assessment and management process, that a survey is necessary, and that they need independent expertise, the Health and Safety Executive publishes guidance on verifying the competence of a surveyor.

Although the specific duty to manage regulation does not come into force until 21 May 2004, employers have for many years, had a general duty under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 to protect employees and others from the risks posed by asbestos.

Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the estimated cost is of a case-law change exercise in (a) correcting Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit records and (b) notifying claimants; and if he will make a statement. [95512]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information is not available. The cost of correcting Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit records following a change in the interpretation of the law by a Social Security Commissioner or the courts can vary greatly depending on the nature of the change and the number of people affected by the change.

Maternal Support

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent assessment he has made of the financial support available to women with children under 3 years. [97611]

Malcolm Wicks: Women with children under three are entitled to Child Benefit provided they are the main carer. In addition, there is a wide range of benefits available to women with children under three, depending on their individual circumstances.

New Deal

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people on the (a) New Deal for Young People and (b) the New Deal for 25 Plus have had their jobseeker's allowance reduced in each year by (a) two weeks, (b) four weeks, and (c) 26 weeks; and whether anyone has suffered more than one 26 week sanction. [91977]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 23 January 2003]: The information requested is not available. We only record the total number of sanctions imposed, not the number of people sanctioned.

A breakdown of the length of sanctions imposed is not available, as the data requires further work to improve its validity and reliability. Officials have begun work to provide more detailed and robust information on the sanction regime in the future.

New Deal for Disabled People

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many disabled people found jobs through the New Deal for Disabled People in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 in (i) Scotland and (ii) Fife; how many of these people are still in employment; and what plans he has to review the effectiveness of the service. [93564]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: New Deal for Disabled People (NDDP) is the first national programme designed specifically to help people with health conditions and disabilities move into and keep jobs. A comprehensive programme of evaluation is in place to assess its effectiveness. Reports on different elements of the evaluation will be published between early 2003 and 2004; a series of synthesis reports will bring together the available evidence at various points during the evaluation programme.

After a slow start, the performance of job brokers in Scotland has improved significantly. In support of this, a recent exercise was conducted to increase coverage and 20 organisations are now involved with the delivery of NDDP in Scotland, ensuring greater choice and availability to customers. In the financial year to April 2002, there were 44 authorised job entries in Scotland. By the end of November'2002, this figure had increased to 479 (a percentage increase of 91 per cent.). The available information is in the table.

NDDP performance in Scotland

	July 2001 to December 2001	January 2002 to November 2002	Total
Numbers entering employment	29	595	624
Numbers sustaining employment[2]	n/a	61	61

Notes:

1. Information is not available broken down by local authority or Government office region.
2. Data for sustained employment (defined as remaining in paid work for 26 weeks out of a 39-week period) was not collected until January 2002.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to the Speaker's Statement of 20 November 2002, Official Report, column 645, whether he has reviewed his Department's handling of parliamentary questions; and if he will make a statement. [91746]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I have, with my Permanent Secretary, reviewed arrangements for handling parliamentary questions. During the last session we answered around 4,000 questions, and although there can be no absolute safeguard against error, we are satisfied that we have robust arrangements in place to ensure we discharge our obligations to Parliament.

Pensions

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the cost of raising the basic state pension to the level of the minimum income guarantee; and if he will make a statement. [97359]

Mr. McCartney: If the maximum rate payable of the basic state pension was increased to the level of the minimum income guarantee and all other payments increased proportionately, we estimate that this would cost in the region of £8.3 billion in 2003–04.

Under this proposal the poorest pensioners are no better off. The increase in the basic state pension is completely offset by a withdrawal of income related benefits. The biggest gainers are better off pensioners.

Notes:

1. Figures are in 2002–03 price terms, rounded to the nearest £100 million.

2. The estimate takes into account offsetting savings in income related benefits. Income related benefit offsets are calculated using the DWP Policy Simulation Model 2003–04.

3. For modelling purposes, Pension Credit is assumed to be in place throughout 2003–04. In fact, Pension Credit will begin in October 2003.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the annual cost of increasing the basic state pension by the rate of average earnings growth for each of the next 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [97364]

Mr. McCartney: The information requested is set out in the table.

As a result of measures introduced since 1997, virtually all pensioner households are better off than they would have been with an earnings link in the basic state pension.

This year the Government are spending an extra £6 billion in real terms on pensioners as a result of policies introduced since 1997. This includes £2.5 billion more on the poorest third of pensioners. This is three times more than an earnings link since 1998 would have given them.

Estimated cost of increasing the basic state pension by average earnings from April 2004

Year	Cost
2003–04	340 million
2004–05	900 million
2005–06	1.4 billion
2006–07	1.9 billion
2007–08	2.5 billion
2008–09	3.1 billion
2009–10	3.7 billion
2010–11	4.4 billion
2011–12	5 billion
2012–13	5.7 billion

Notes:

1. Figures are in 2002–03 price terms rounded to the nearest £100 million, except 2003–04 which is rounded to the nearest £10 million.
2. The estimates take into account offsetting savings in income-related benefits. Income-related benefit offsets are calculated using the DWP policy simulation model.
3. The maximum rate payable of the basic state pension is assumed to increase by average earnings and all other payments proportionately.
4. Average earnings assumptions are consistent with the pre-Budget report assumptions.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the cost of increasing the basic state pension to the level of the minimum income guarantee for those (a) 75 and above and (b) above 80, net of savings in means-tested benefits and additional income tax revenue. [97380]

Mr. McCartney: Increasing the basic state pension for older pensioners would not target resources on those who are most in need. While it is true that older pensioners tend to be poorer on average, income inequality is far more pronounced across the whole pensioner population than between pensioners of different ages. For example, the median net income of the richest fifth of pensioner couples is around four times that of the poorest fifth.

If the basic state pension was increased to the level of the minimum income guarantee for pensioners aged 75 and over in 2003–04, we estimate that the increase in public expenditure could be around £2.9 billion. This is calculated on the generous assumption that consequent savings in other benefits and any additional tax yield are channelled back into the basic state pension.

If the basic state pension were increased to the level of the minimum income guarantee for pensioners aged 80 and over in 2003–04, we estimate that the increase in public expenditure could be around £1.7 billion. This is calculated on the generous assumption that consequent savings in other benefits and any additional tax yield are channelled back into the basic state pension.

Notes:

1. Estimates are in cash terms for Great Britain and are rounded to the nearest £100 million.
2. The estimate takes account of offsetting savings in income related benefits and additional tax yield. Income-related benefit offsets are calculated using the Department for Work and Pensions Policy Simulation Model for 2003–04. Additional tax yield is calculated by the Inland Revenue based upon the Survey of Personal Incomes 2000–01, projected to 2003–04.
3. Calculations assume the maximum rate payable of the basic state pension is increased to the level of the minimum income guarantee and all other payments proportionately.
4. For modelling purposes, pension credit is assumed to be in place throughout 2003–04. In fact, pension credit will begin in October 2003.
5. For modelling purposes we have assumed that the savings reward threshold remains unchanged.

Benefit Fraud Hotline

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many calls the National Benefit Fraud Hotline received in each month since January 1997; [92503]

(2) how many calls were made to the National Benefit Fraud Hotline in each year since 1997. [92504]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is in the table.

Tobacco Smoke

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what percentage of workers reported that their workplace was smoke-free in 2001; [96308]

(2) how many workers in England and Wales have been exposed to second-hand tobacco smoke in the workplace (a) regularly and (b) occasionally in each year since 1997. [96309]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Department does not hold data on worker exposure to tobacco smoke in the way requested. In a 2001 survey on smoking behaviour and attitudes undertaken by the Office for National Statistics, 47 per cent. of the workers questioned said that there was a ban on smoking in their workplace. This survey also revealed that 38 per cent. of workers had smoking restricted to designated areas in their workplace, and 6 per cent. of workers worked alone. Nine per cent. of workers in this survey reported that there were no smoking restrictions at all in their workplace.

Top-up Fees

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment his Department has made of the likely effect of the proposed introduction of university top-up fees on the pension contributions of those under 40 years of age. [95648]

Mr. McCartney: Student loans are repaid on an income contingent basis, which means that the amount repaid is affordable and does not prevent graduates from making other investments such as contributions to pension schemes.

We are committed to encouraging people to consider their pension saving options early. Each person needs to decide where the balance between current and future needs lies for them. There will be times in many people's lives when they cannot afford both to contribute to a pension and meet their current needs, but it is important that people save when they can afford to do so. That is why the Green Paper "Simplicity, security and choice: working and saving for retirement" (Cm 5677), published on 17 December 2002, sets out the Government's proposals to work with employers and the financial services industry to provide:

A simple framework to help people understand their choices:

Financial education and awareness to navigate the system, including access to generic financial advice for the mass market;

Personalised information tailored to individual circumstances, so people can make rational choices and a choice of suitable products.

In addition, the Sandler review recommended a suite of tightly regulated products, including a pension product that could be sold through a simplified sales process.

On 5 February 2003, the Government issued a consultation document on the design specification for these products.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what sources of funding will be used after the 2003–04 financial year to continue projects that have been funded by the Windfall Tax. [93999]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The continuing funding for the welfare-to-work initiatives, previously funded by the Windfall Tax, formed part of the 2002 Spending Review settlement for the Department for Work and Pensions.

Workplace Health and Safety

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 7 January, Official Report, column 10W, on workplace health and safety, on what basis the Department for Work and Pensions was able to set public service agreement targets on health and safety. [95011]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Department's PSA targets for improving workplace health and safety are made up of the intermediate targets agreed by the Government and Health and Safety Commission (HSC) in 2000, as part of the Revitalising Health and Safety strategy. These require the Health and Safety Commission and Executive (HSC/E) by 2004 to achieve:

A 5 per cent. reduction of the incidence rate of fatal and major injury accidents;

A 15 per cent. reduction of the number of working days lost per 100,000 workers from work related injury and ill health; and

A 10 per cent. reduction of the incidence rate of cases of work-related health.

In developing the targets, HSE took account of responses to an earlier public consultation on development of a national occupational health strategy (Securing Health Together), forecast changes in the labour market and HSC's experience in developing outcome targets for certain industry sectors.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Brownfield Sites

Llew Smith: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact of the requirements of the water framework directive upon the cost of clean-up of brownfield land for re-use in his sustainable communities plan. [96928]

Mr. McNulty: The Government do not consider that there will necessarily be any impact on the clean-up costs of previously developed land arising from the water framework directive. The standard for clean-up under both the contaminated land provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 and the planning system is the removal of unacceptable risk, so as to make a site suitable for its existing and future uses respectively. This will ensure that all receptors of potential discharges from a site are protected, including humans, surface and groundwater, flora, fauna and buildings. This approach is already advised in draft planning technical advice for England, which was issued for consultation in February 2002 and which will be finalised later this year. The Government consider that this approach will be consistent with the requirements of the water framework directive as regards water quality.

Broxtowe Local Plan

Mr. Allen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects the Broxtowe Local Plan Inspectors' report to be available. [96703]

Mr. McNulty: Although Broxtowe Borough Council did not enter into a Service Agreement with the Planning Inspectorate for the delivery of the report, the provisions of the standard Service Agreement are deemed to apply. On that basis, the delivery of the Inspector's report is promised no later than Thursday 25 September 2003.

Capital Projects

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place the evaluations for Capital Modernisation Fund projects in his Department since 1998 in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [97032]

Mr. Raynsford: An evaluation report on the development of the Planning Inspectorate's Planning Portal Programme, which was part funded by the Capital Modernisation Fund and which formally closed in October 2002, is being prepared. It will be placed in the Library of both Houses shortly.

This is the only Modernisation Fund project within the remit of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister which has been completed.

Disabled Facilities Grants

Diana Organ: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which district and city councils in Gloucestershire have awarded Disabled Facilities Grants; and how much was spent by each in each year since 1998. [97245]

Mr. McNulty: Records indicate that the total eligible expenditure on Disabled Facilities Grants by the six Gloucestershire local housing authorities since 1998–99 is as follows:

£000

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Cheltenham	372	326	331	320
Cotswold	269	311	523	260
Forest of Dean	231	171	198	218
Gloucester	365	519	488	268
Stroud	208	175	180	173
Tewkesbury	232	240	300	247

Domestic Violence

Margaret Moran: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the data on local authority performance provided to the Audit Commission on the extent of domestic violence refuge provision in 2001–02. [97913]

Mr. McNulty: Information on local authority performance for 2001–02, including data on the number of domestic violence refuge places provided or supported by local authorities, was placed in the Library of the House in December 2002.

Havering Borough

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what plans he has to visit the London Borough of Havering; [96207]

(2) what discussions he had during January 2003 with representatives of the London Borough of Havering regarding the grant settlement for 2003–04; and if he will review the level of grant. [96206]

Mr. Raynsford: My hon. Friend the Member for Shipley met with a delegation representing the London Borough of Havering on Thursday 8 January 2003 to discuss the provisional localgovernment finance settlement for 2003–2004. Three written representations were also received from Havering during consultation on the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's proposals. These representations have been carefully considered alongside all others, as the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister took final decisions on the settlement.

Parliament has now approved the settlement which provides an increase in formula grant of £2.25 billion or 5.9 per cent. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has ensured that all local authorities receive a grant increase on a like for like basis which is at least greater than inflation. The London Borough of Havering has benefited from this guarantee. It will receive £154.4 million in general grant in 2003–04, which is an increase of £5.2 million.

There are currently no plans for my right hon. Friend Deputy Prime Minister to visit the London Borough of Havering. I myself visited the London Borough of Havering on September 2002.

Lionheart Industrial Estate, Alnwick

Mr. Beith: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will call in the planning application by Northumberland County Council for a waste transfer station on the Lionheart Industrial Estate, Alnwick. [97260]

Mr. McNulty: Northumberland County Council, as waste planning authority, granted itself planning permission subject to a number of conditions on 5 February 2003, for the construction of a waste transfer station and household waste recovery centre at the Lionheart Enterprise Park, Alnwick.

Prior to that decision, my right hon. Friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, received representations which included a request for him to call-in the planning application. My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister concluded that there was not sufficient conflict in this case with national policies or any other sufficient reason to warrant call-in of the application.

A copy of the non-intervention letter giving the reasons for this decision will shortly be placed on The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's web-site at http://www.planning.odpm.gov.uk/callins/index.htm. However, officials will forward a copy to the right hon. Member.

Local Government Finance

Harry Cohen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister for what purposes he has held back part of the local government grant settlement; and if he will make a statement [97936]

Mr. Raynsford: None of the grant to be distributed by the 2003–04 local government finance settlement will be held back. Each local authority and specified body will get the grant allocation agreed by Parliament on the 5 of February, unless Parliament agrees an amending report at a later date.

Local Government Recruitment

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action he is taking to increase (a) graduate recruits, (b) recruits from the private sector and (c) recruits from the voluntary sector into the senior management of local government; and if he will make a statement. [97599]

Mr. Leslie: Recruitment and retention is a key part of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's capacity building programme for local government. Both the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the LGA have committed additional funds to expand the work of the local government specified bodies as part of this programme. As a direct result, the Employers Organisation (EO) is to increase the number of students on their National Graduate Recruitment and Development Programme in 2003–04.

As well as recruitment, it is equally important that local government employees get the support to encourage them to stay. In collaboration with Warwick University, the EO will run a number of support programmes for aspiring middle and senior managers. A new accelerated development programme based on the Civil Service's "Fast Stream" scheme will provide support to staff aiming for senior management positions through the key stages of their career. In addition, the Improvement and Development Agency's (IDeA) has developed an Advanced Leadership Programme to develop the skills of aspiring senior managers in local government.

These initiatives, along with the wider modernisation agenda, will improve the image of local government. This will make it a more attractive option for people from all areas, including the voluntary and private sector, with whom authorities already work in partnership.

North West Regional Assembly

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what central Government funding the North West Regional Assembly received in each year from 1998 to 2003. [97199]

Mr. Raynsford: The North West Regional Assembly first received Government funding in 2000, when they were appointed as the Regional Planning Body for the North West. Funding is currently channelled through top tier local authorities. The Regional Assemblies Preparation Bill, currently before Parliament, contains provision that would enable the money to be paid directly to the Assembly. The amounts involved are as follows:

2000–01	800,000
2001–02	850,000
2002–03	840,000

In the Spending Review 2000, the Government announced that they would make £15 million available to all the Regional Assemblies over a three year period (2001–04), to enable them to carry out their scrutiny of the Regional Development Agencies, to co-ordinate regional strategies and to undertake other activity to benefit the region. The NWRA's share of this is as follows:

2001–02	500,000
2002–03	600,000
2003–04	600,000

Planning Enforcement

Mr. Wood: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he plans to publish a response to the consultation exercise on the effectiveness of planning enforcement; and what process will follow. [97641]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently considering the 482 responses received to the "Review of the Planning Enforcement System in England" consultation paper. We will be making an announcement on our conclusions and how we intend to take them forward as soon as possible.

Rough Sleepers

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what methodology is used to count the number of rough sleepers; when the last count took place; and how many rough sleepers there were in (a) Portsmouth, (b) Southampton and (c) Fareham at that date. [94923]

Mrs. Roche: Guidance was first published in 1996 on counting methodology developed in partnership with charities and voluntary organisations helping people sleeping rough. Independent evaluation has confirmed that the methodology remains the most robust method for measuring relative levels of rough sleeping and of change over time.

Local authorities are responsible for ensuring that the counts are undertaken and that the methodology is followed. The snapshot counts should take place on a single night, between 12 am and 6 am. The definition of people who should be included in rough sleeper counts is clearly set out in the guidance. It is: people sleeping, or bedded down, in the open air (such as on the streets, or in doorways, parks or bus shelters); people in buildings or other places not designed for habitation (such as barns, sheds, car parks, cars, derelict boats, or stations). Guidance is also given on the appropriate timing of rough sleeper counts—which will depend on the level of rough sleeping reported and on local circumstances.

Portsmouth last carried out a count in May 2002 and found one rough sleeper; Southampton last carried out a count in November 2001 and found six rough sleepers; and Fareham last carried out a count in February 1998 and found 13 rough sleepers. Since 1998, Fareham has reduced its numbers of rough sleepers and in the Housing Investment Programme return, July 2002, returned an estimate of 0–10.

Sustainable Communities (North-East)

Vera Baird: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will announce a housing market renewal pathfinder project in the Tees Valley. [97216]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is promoting a new, long-term approach to tackling housing low demand and abandonment. Nine pathfinders have been identified, focused on the areas most acutely affected. Although we are not seeking to establish further pathfinders at this time, in our action programme, "Sustainable Communities: building for the future", we explained that we would use the lessons learned from the pathfinders to help all areas with declining demand to tackle the problems better.

Waste Disposal

Harry Cohen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will establish a special fund for the allocation of resources to the most affected local authorities for dealing with fly tipping, tyres, obsolete refrigerators and abandoned cars; and if he will make a statement. [94517]

Mr. Meacher: I have been asked to reply.

The Government do not have any plans to establish a fund specifically targeted at local authorities most affected by fly tipping of tyres, since this would be against the polluter pays principle and may create a perverse incentive for people to fly tip tyres safe in the knowledge that the public purse will fund any clearance. However, the Environment Agency has set up the Tyre Watch campaign to help tackle the problem of fly tipped tyres and to support a sustainable recovery and disposal system. The DTI is also exploring alternative routes for disposing of tyres, given the forthcoming ban from disposal to landfill under the Landfill Directive.

We have provided additional finance of £46 million to local authorities to cover their costs of disposing of refrigerators. Also, interim funding has been agreed for local authorities to help with the implementation of the End of Life Vehicles Directive, which may lead to an increase in levels of abandoned cars. The DTI will meet the additional costs and have secured three years funding (£25 million for 2003–04, 2004–05 and 2005–06) which was agreed in Spending Review 2002.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Lay Magistrates

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many lay magistrates there were in 1997; and what the most recent figure is. [95490]

Yvette Cooper: On 31 December 1997, our records showed that there were 26,018 magistrates in England and Wales excluding the Duchy of Lancaster (where the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster is responsible for appointments). On 1 April 2002, there were 24,526[1]. However, the figures are not comparable because all records were re-validated in 2001 when a computer database was introduced and it became apparent that the previous figures had been inaccurate.

[1] Record-keeping changed to financial years in 2000–01.

Civil and Family Courts

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when she will launch the consultation on "Modernising the Civil and Family Courts". [97218]

Yvette Cooper: Consultation on "Modernising the Civil Courts", (which sets out the vision for civil and family business) took place between January and April 2001. A subsequent report entitled "Modernising the Civil and Family Courts" was published in May 2002. This report was a response to those who responded to the earlier consultation paper and also outlined the progress made.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (a) when and (b) how the local consultation in Dorset on modernising the civil and family courts will take place. [97223]

Yvette Cooper: Consultation on Modernising the Civil Courts, (which sets out the vision for civil and family business) took place between January and April 2001. A subsequent report entitled 'Modernising the Civil and Family Courts' was published in May 2002. This report was a response to those who responded to the Modernising the Civil Courts Consultation paper and outlined the progress made during that year.

My Department also plans to consult specifically on the proposed model of the estate set out in the May report. No timetable has yet been set, but the consultation document will be tailored specifically to the needs of local communities. The views of all those with an interest in the future status of civil justice in Dorset will therefore be canvassed. This will include Members of Parliament.

Departmental Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if she will list consultations the Department has conducted since 1997; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed. [97431]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultation applies to all formal written national public consultation documents issued by Departments from 1 January 2001 and the information requested is not available before that date. Listed as follows are the LCD Consultation Papers.

Independent Appellate Authority

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Independent Appellate Authority notified the Home Office of its decision to reject the Home Office's appeal to the tribunal in the case of Mrs. T. B. (TH/22817/2001; B1010649). [97676]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Notification that Leave to Appeal to the tribunal had been refused was sent to the Home Office on 27 November 2002.

Libra Project

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the costs of her Department's Libra project are (a) as originally estimated and (b) as currently predicted. [97711]

Yvette Cooper: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Online Sales/Purchases

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what (a) products, (b) goods and (c) services were (i) bought and (ii) sold online by her Department in each of the last five years. [97453]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My Department launched Money Claim Online on 4 February 2002. This service enables users to make claims online to recover money owed to them. Up to 28 January 2003, 16,659 claims had been issued using this service.

We do not currently purchase or offer other goods or services online. However, we intend to commence pilot projects for the procurement online of forms, stationery and rail tickets in the near future.

Special Advisers/Press Officers

Annabelle Ewing: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) special advisers and (b) press officers were employed (i) full-time, (ii) part-time and (iii) on a contract basis by her Department in (A) 2001–02 and (B) 2002–03. [97946]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Timber

Ms Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department which companies supply timber and timber products to his Department. [95701]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The major supplies of timber to my Department are for furniture, and the suppliers are with the following Office for Government Commerce contracts: Senator International, Interiors, Godfrey Syrett Ltd. and Fray Design Ltd.

Vehicle Fleets

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress has been made, by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each category of (i) vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel, on an annual basis, over each of the past three years, in renewal of his Department's and agencies' vehicle fleet on a lower emission basis. [96448]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My Department does not hold information relating to the improvement in vehicle emission standards of its fleet over the past three years. However, we will do so in the future as part of our approach to the Sustainable Development Plan.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what the annual rate is at which his Department has renewed its vehicle fleet, by (a) volume and (b) percentage for each category of (i) vehicle, (ii) type of power unit and (iii) type of fuel over the last three years. [96449]

Ms Rosie Winterton: My Department purchased 52 replacement cars in 2000, 31 in 2001 and 235 cars in 2002. Details are provided in the table. In future we will only lease duel fuel vehicles and they will be replaced every four years.

	2000		2001		2002
Cars	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
Petrol	0	0	0	1	1	0.5
Diesel	49	94	30	97	233	99
LPG	3	6	1	3	1	0.5
Total	52	100	31	100	235	100

Witnesses

Tim Loughton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court cases failed to take place in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2002–03 because (i) the accused and (ii) witnesses failed to turn up; and what action he has taken to combat failure of court cases because of non-attendance of parties. [96005]

Yvette Cooper: In 1997–98 56,116 cases were listed for trial in the Crown Court of which 1,967 (3.50 per cent.) failed to take place due to the accused, and 3,848 (6.85 per cent.) due to the witness(es), failing to attend.

Between April and September 2002 (the most recent data currently available) 27,427 cases were listed for trial in the Crown Court. 1,024 (3.73 per cent.) failed to take place due to the accused, and 1,717 (6.26 per cent.) due to the witness(es), failing to attend. Data on why cases fail has only been collected nationally by magistrates' courts from 1 April 2002.

For the six month period April to September 2002 81,437 trials were listed for trial in the magistrates' court, of which 6,780 (8.32 per cent.) failed to take place due to the accused, and 2,875 (3.53 per cent.) due to the witness(es), failing to attend.

Action is being taken across Criminal Justice Agencies to reduce the failure of court cases due to non attendance of witnesses, in particular the use of video links for vulnerable and intimidated witnesses, and the introduction of Victim Support into all courts.

My Department is currently undertaking a Case Preparation Project with CIS partners which includes work on identifying reasons why defendants and witnesses fail to turn up for hearings

Youth Court Cases

Tim Loughton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many youth court cases in 2002–03 have had to be abandoned because the accused and witnesses failed to turn up. [96006]

Yvette Cooper: 81,437 trials were listed in the magistrates courts during the period April 2002 to September 2002, of which 2,875 (3.53 per cent.) did not continue due to the absence or withdrawal of a witness. 6,780 trials (8.32 per cent.) became ineffective due to the absence of the defendant. It is not possible to break down these figures into those relating specifically to youth cases.

My Department is currently undertaking a Case Preparation Project with CJS partners, which includes work on identifying reasons why defendants and witnesses fail to turn up for hearings.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 399

SESSION 2002–2003

3rd February—13th February 2003

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'ws' indicate written statements.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting, is a written statement or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - ~~Chamber Debates (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions~~ to debates);
  - Debates Westminster Hall Debates (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Written Statements (consisting of ministerial statements issued in writing); and
  - Questions (which includes all written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division
- (HL)=Bill starting in House of Lords
- (SP)=Bill in Scottish Parliament.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
